PREFACE

This little booklet has been prepared for those members of the combined families who would like to know something about their ancestors, who and where are their relatives, what many of them have done, and to have a history that each one can add to, and pass down through succeeding generations.

Genealogy may be called the "Science of Personal Identification". Its object is the discovery and permanent record of facts and information, as conclusive as possible, of the identity of each person, both in his relations to those who have preceded him and those who follow him in his own family line (lineal descends or "lineage"--family tree is a misnomer) as well as his relations to those belonging to "collateral" lines of the general family of which he and they are members.

As the minister said in church the other morning; "Who am I? Where did I come from? Where am I going? What am I doing with my life?"

In the Gospel (St. Luke viii 4) for today (the Sunday called Sexagesima, that this paragraph is being written) the parable was concerned with the sowing of the seed on various types of soil, rocks, etc., and that which fell on good soil, meaning those people who have deep roots, brought forth good fruit. We who have the Pierce, Lanphere, Hall inheritance have good roots and so it is the "bounden duty" of each of us to hold our heads high and do the best job possible.

In obtaining the information and working with it in a genealogy as wide spread as this one, a person becomes quite imbued with the faith expressed in the wills and other documents by those who have "gone on before us" and the faith of salvation and eventual joining with them grows stronger.

Some people have little interest in historical organizations or ancestors. They are busy doing things in the present, making their own history. Others of us are interested in both--we are busy making our presence or personalities known, making our history, but at the same time we are satisfying one facet of our intellect by learning about our antecedents--where we come from--and thinking about where we are going.

It is well, at this time, to draw attention to the great piece of work done by our Cousin Frances Lanphere Elder, whose homes are in Cincinnati, Ohio and Tarboro, North Carolina. Her husband is a retired Presbyterian minister and during the many years they were in the East she spent a great amount of time in the searches for information. Her story, "These Lanpheres", in four chapters reveals many things and we are grateful to her for it. Her excellent writing makes such a warm interesting story about those people who lived this life before us and did so much to make our lives so much easier.

I wish to thank all the many people who have so willingly sent the information requested, and which has made a great deal of this information possible.

It will be of interest to note that as families moved about through the centuries, and many did not write too clearly the surnames went through many spellings and we will use them that way herein. Pierce was Percy, Pers then Peirse, Perse, Percey, Perce, Pearce, Peirsey, etc.

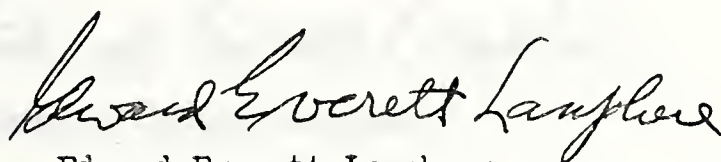

The Pierce surnames are a variant of Pehr (Per), a shortened form of Peter. The English names are from the French forms Pier, Piers. All the names are from "Peter names" and originate from the Latin and Greek Petrus (a stone) a favorite baptismal name honoring "Simon, called Peter" apostle of the New Testament. The modern French name for Peter is Pierre. Throughout most of the generations the Pers to the Pierce name was pronounced like purse, and in parts of England and New England still is.

Lanphere has been Landfear, Lamphear, Lamphier, Lanphier, etc.

Martin is derived from the Latin Martinus (from Mars, God of War) Martial, warlike--The Martins of the Highland were affiliated with the Camerons and Mac Donalds.

Pike has been Pyke.

The numbering system and arrangement is according to that used by The New York Genealogical and Biographical Society. Essentially this numbering system combines three sets of numbers, the number that is assigned to each individual according to his place in his generation in chronological relation to his brothers and sisters and aunts and uncles in their sequential order, the number of his generation which is the superior number following his given name (this is followed by his parent, grandparent, etc., name in parenthesis), and finally the use of the Roman numbering system to number the children in the family in the order of date of birth. Spaces have been left in the numbers to allow for insertion of information that is still to be found or verified in the future.

PREFACE FOR THE ADDITIONS

While attending a Lanphere Family reunion last summer in Prophetstown, Illinois, a good deal of additional information was acquired. Also, Cousin Frances was able to send information concerning other vacant spots in the first edition. These are paged 23 to 32.

After writing several hundred letters and carrying on considerable correspondence with members of other Lanphier, Lanphear, etc., families in this country and Ireland, it has been decided to include the principal ones of these families in this book. They follow after the Acherman Line.

Considerable correspondence has been had with city clerks, Probate clerks, Registers of Deeds and cemetery superintendents. Also published church records of baptisms, and marriages have been reviewed. All information has been included. On the other hand, a great many people have no idea who their grandparents or earlier ancestors were.

Due to the fact that practically all of the information has come to us from others, we can take no responsibility for its accuracy, we are just reporting. Actually, I am certain of only the birthday of one person listed herein.

It is to be hoped that someone using this book will help us discover who were the ancestors of George Lanphere, Caroline Pike and Captain James Martin.

FOREWORD

The history of any family, enduring for three centuries in this country, must of necessity be a cross-section of the life of the nation, its founders, colonies, revolutions, expansion, renewed pioneering and further expansion.

It is said that, as Americans, we are just emerging from that state of extreme individualism, characteristic of very young people and very young nations, in which there is no sense of continuity between past and present and so, no feeling of responsibility for the future.

Moved by the hope that these brief historical sketches may join past to present and establish in some degree that sense of responsibility for future generations, I dedicate these "Letters of Introduction" to "Our Children's Children" including in the dedication, my own three sons who have helped in their production:

CHAPTER I

From the Old World to The New

My ancestors have been pioneers from the time the first settlements were made on the New England coast almost to the time when the frontier closed. Moved by various motives they came to America in the seventeenth century from different parts of England and from Holland. They became planters, Indian-fighters, sea-captains, preachers, soldiers and prosperous farmers again. As the decades made up the first century of American history and the first century gave way to the second and the second to the third, they kept going west with true pioneer spirit. From Massachusetts and Rhode Island they went to New York; from New York they went to Illinois.

I have always had a fellow feeling for the pioneering strain which reached out for better things at the sacrifice of some very fine things that might have been preserved by "staying on". The long struggle with the wilderness doubtless resulted in some loss of spiritual heritage. Settlers in the new country missed the culture and easier living of a more stable civilization. They gained a determination, a stubborn courage and a fixedness of purpose, bred in the struggle from generation to generation, which made for the development of sturdy characters as well as sturdy bodies, fit for survival. They had also the enduring satisfaction of having carried forward the customs and ideals of the English-speaking world over a highway of their own building. In new land they fashioned what we have today.

In this brief sketch I shall aim to give you a chronicle of "Ordinary Americans", under which category, we need no one to remind us, most of us come. Against the rich background of three centuries of world history, the figures of my forbears move in shadowy outline, moved by epoch-making events beyond their control but bearing always their share of responsibility. Here and there we shall choose one, upon whom the spotlight of history played for a brief moment, and try in imagination to live with that person through that time.

Our story begins ten generations ago, as does many another American saga, with "A Tale of Three Brothers" who played a leading part in the early struggles of the infant New England colonies. They were John, William and Michael Pierce. In England in the opening years of the seventeenth century both gentlemen and poorer folk were hard pressed to keep up their scale of living, or indeed to make any living at all. Some knowledge of the New World, discovered a hundred years before, was being brought back by explorers and adventurers, and the fever of colonization and exploration began to rise in the veins of the nation. Speculation mounted. Better women and duchesses staked their all on holdings in promotion companies. Prominent among these was the London Land Company, a syndicate of business men or "Merchant Adventurers" in which Mr. John Pierce, "citizen and cloth-worker of London", figured largely. To this company the Pilgrim band in Holland applied for terms of transportation and settlement in the New World, desiring to be set down "about the mouth of the Delaware" within the patent of the company. Negotiations were largely undertaken between Pastor Robinson for the Pilgrims and Thomas Weston for the land company. The expense of chartering and outfitting the Mayflower--as well as the Speedwell which was later abandoned as unseaworthy--amounted to some seven thousand pounds sterling. On their part the colonist could advance only the collateral of their promised combined earnings from hunting, fishing, lumbering and any other possible enterprise in the new land, until such debt should be paid.

Today our children glibly recount all the incidents of the stormy voyage of that tiny, overcrowded ship of destiny and the forced landing of its little company, out of season, on territory controlled by another holding company. The story of that first sad, hard winter is common knowledge. It is far better known to us indeed than it was to the speculative public waiting in London for returns from their investments. To them the Pilgrims were just another group of colonists, chancing their economic future on a turn of good fortune. Being human, when the Mayflower returned with no cargo and little promise of future earnings, their wrath was kindled. Thomas Weston, whose lack of principle becomes clear in his later story, sold out his interest in the company. At this point John Pierce seems to have intervened and obtained a patent from the Council of New England for that part of the coast on which the Forefathers had inadvertently settled. He seems also to have planned to undertake the development and oversight of the Plymouth Colony on his own responsibility. His terms however were greatly resented by the colonists as not of their choosing and more burdensome than could be economically endured, leading, according to their belief, to virtual enslavement.

The deep responsibility which Mr. John Pierce felt for the little group of human beings, left now to his particular care, among the many having dealings with the London Land Company, is amply attested by later facts. So little did the Merchant Adventurers themselves know of the Pilgrims, that they long termed them "Mr. Pierce's company." He may indeed have wished to emulate the Proprietors of Virginia colonies, differing in no wise in ambition from other men of means about him, who sought to establish their power and fortune in the New World. But at any rate it seems very clear that he meant to give the matter his personal attention, and perhaps he planned, as later some dozen of the "Gentlemen Adventurers" actually did, to throw in his own lot with the Planters of Plymouth.

In December of 1621 he equipped the Paragon, carrying provisions, freight and passengers for Plymouth, and set forth in command. In two weeks he was forced to return to England, badly damaged by a storm. The second attempt in February of 1622 was even more disastrous. In no wise daunted he again repaired the Paragon and started her out once more. This time the ship was under the command of his younger brother, Captain William Pierce. So great had been

John Pierce's losses however that his fortune was now broken and probably his health and ambition as well. Consequently he sold his patent to the Plymouth Company. Sometime thereafter the Colony bought up all the stock from the Merchant partners in London and paid for it in installments, thus by 1633 becoming independent owners of the country they had occupied and cleared. The name of John Pierce does not again appear but we may well believe that if he lived his interest continued to be directed toward New England. We can imagine that he and Captain John Smith, the doughty but equally unfortunate "Admiral of New England", may have compared their losses and disappointments over a friendly beaker in some London ale house and pledged themselves to keep up the agitation for the complete colonization of Elizabeth's lands. At least two younger brothers of the Pierce family figured even more actively than Mr. John Pierce in the actual settlement and early development of the Colonies.

Captain William Pierce is known to chroniclers as the most celebrated master of ships that came into the waters of New England and also as the intimate friend of Governors Winslow and Bradford and others of the leading colonists. He appears first in the early records of the colonies as "master of the ill-starred Paragon" on her finally successful voyage of 1622. The next year he brought the Anne to Plymouth with her noteworthy company. In 1624 he sailed the Charity, bringing Edward Winslow and the first cattle to New England. In 1625 he was again at Plymouth in the Jacob bringing Winslow and more cattle. In 1629 he commanded the renowned Mayflower and in her he took a company from Holland as far as the Bay on their way to Plymouth.

In February 1630 he sailed the good ship Lyon from Bristol, England, as a part of Governor Winthrop's fleet. On reaching Salem they found Endicott's colony "in a sad and unexpected condition," due to exposure and lack of food. So Captain Pierce hastened back for provisions, which he secured with difficulty, owing to the shortage of crops in England. He returned on November 22, 1630, just as the crisis of the famine was reached. In gratitude for this deliverance the first formal Thanksgiving service in America was held. Almost two centuries and a half later a descendant of the Pierce family introduced into Congress a bill to make Thanksgiving the legal holiday we now enjoy.

On this trip also Captain William Pierce was host to that brilliant but erratic young Welshman, Roger Williams, and his wife, who troubled the peace of the religious leaders in Cambridge, Salem and Plymouth before he established his own settlement in Rhode Island. Again in 1631 Pierce captained the Lyon, this time bearing to the colonies the lovely wife of Governor Winthrop, and John Eliot, famous apostle to the Indians.

Many later adventures are recorded, as he sailed, not only between Old and New England, now commanding the defense of London and again opening up the first trade with the West Indies, but up and down the coast of the New World, playing a strong man's part both in the commercial development and the political history of the infant colonies. It is significant that he brought the first sweet potatoes to Boston from the West Indies in 1636 and three years earlier had brought in the first cotton. Even at that remote period the vicious circle of "rum, molasses and niggers" had been instituted and Captain Pierce is said to have carried to the West Indies in his voyage of 1638, "several Pequot Indian prisoners as bondsmen" and to have returned with negro slaves. A happier incident is his gift of an "aligarto" to Governor Winthrop. The Chronicler relates that "the animal was of much interest to the grave Bostonians."

In all his cargoes, however, there was nothing more significant in the life of the colonies than the printing press and printer brought over in 1638 and established in Cambridge in the home of Henry Dunster, first president of Harvard College. The first bound work printed in the colonies was issued in 1639 "calculated for New England by William Peirse, mariner, former captain of the "Anne", "Lyon" and "Mayflower" and known as "Peirse's Almanac." "Today it would be called "Pierce's Digest of News, both Religious and Political." The weightiest and most noted work of this old press was without doubt Eliot's Indian Bible. Prodigious labor went into the translation of this work and equally prodigious labor into the printing which was completed in 1663. The work that this humble hand machine did for the enlightenment of the colonies cannot be overestimated.

Our seafaring captain established a residence in Boston and is mentioned as one of one hundred and fifty one members of the Charleston Church which removed to Boston. Later he may have removed to Salem, because of the ship-building industry which was already flourishing there. In 1633 a fine new ship, the Desire, carrying one hundred and twenty tons was built for him at Marble Head. With this ship he established in 1639 a sailing record for the times and one difficult to duplicate even now. He sailed the Desire from Boston to the Thames in exactly twenty-three days. We may recall that the Mayflower seemed but a merecockle-shell on the wastes of the Atlantic, yet her tonnage was recorded as one hundred and eighty.

In "Old Salem Towne", founded in 1626, Captain Pierce would find an atmosphere to his liking. The Salem people from the earliest time were wide-awake, progressive folk with a great love for the water. Salem ships and sailors have always known the world around. Nothing authentic remains from three centuries ago, but there are many homes of our common ancestors, intact with their furnishings just as they were two centuries ago. One of the most interesting is the Pierce-Johnnot-Nichols house, a mansion in Samuel McIntyre's best style, with its great hall and magnificent stairway, its "widow's walk" on the house top and the quaint paved court in the rear with the carriage yard and the terraced garden leading down to the sea, where the Master debarked at his own wharf. The older portion of the city is charming with its shady streets lined with arching elms and its centuries-old homes with their famous colonial doorways. Could Captain William's ghost return he would still find himself at home in "Salem Town."

The brave and energetic captain met his death in characteristic manner. In carrying a party of dissenting colonists to the West Indies for settlement, he incurred the hostility of the Spaniards and was unable to land his party. He further undertook the rescue of a colony already living there. The enemy opened fire upon him with cannon. He sent his people into the hold for safety but he and his sailing master were fatally wounded in making their escape. He was buried at sea off the Bahamas July 13, 1641. His fifty-one years had been spent for the most part on the water and there he found a fitting grave. The old chronicle says, "His death was much lamented in the two colonies which had so long known him as a skilful navagator and a Christian gentlemen." Of his children, some having been educated in England and having settled in the professions, remained there; others lived out their allotted lives in the New World.

Tradition has it that these three London brothers hailed from a family of ten. It would seem that in accordance with the rule of entail and primogeniture in English families, John had inherited the family fortune and the younger sons were expected to make their own way in the world, in trade or in the professions of preaching or soldiering. Accordingly we learn that Michael Pierce, born about 1615 had evidently, as the youngest, trained for the army in his youth, arrived in the New World with his young bride whose name we do not know, and settled in Hingham, Massachusetts. All of his eleven children were born there; his wife dying, upon the birth of the youngest, Elizabeth, in 1662. He is known as a landholder in Hingham in 1645. In 1646 and 1647 he purchased extensive holdings in Scituate from a land holding company known as the Conihasset Partners but did not build on his Scituate land until 1663. This farm is beautiful for situation, with upland and meadows, lying fair in the sunshine. It is so sheltered and so far removed from the roar of the neighboring ocean, that his nostalgia for his gentle English home must have found deep satisfaction in its quiet beauty.

During his residence in Hingham, Michael had served as Ensign under command of Captain Miles Standish, and upon removal to Scituate he naturally transferred his civil and military interests. In 1667 he was elected constable. In 1670 he qualified as freeman and following that served two years as selectman. In order fully to appreciate these modest honors which were bestowed upon our ancestor, a word must be said about our earliest form of government. The right of suffrage was most jealously guarded in Plymouth Colony from the hour of the signing of the Compact aboard the Mayflower. Only he who was a church member, orthodox in his religious views and exemplary in his private life could be a freeman. All those who took the oath of fidelity could vote but must elect from freemen. In the beginning no property qualification was laid down for electoral franchise but by 1669 the General Court of Plymouth Colony had enacted that "none shall vote in Town Meeting but freeman or free holders of twenty-pound ratable estate and of good conversation, having taken the oath of fidelitie." Later the amount of property required was doubled.

The affairs of both town and colony were governed by an assembly of the freeman of all the towns in the General Court of Plymouth. Hence men were sometimes deliberate in qualifying as freemen in their own locality, and an efficient local self-government was slow of accomplishment. Scituate did not choose selectmen until 1666 and the law provided they should be "able and discreet men." The old records have it that "Capt. Michael Peirce, the Indian fighter, served two terms." In 1669 he was approved by the Colony court as captain of the Scituate Military Company, and it was in this kind of public service that his abilities were especially conspicuous.

Following the death of his first wife, Capt. Pierce had married again, as usual in Colonial days, if not in ours, as estimable widow with money, Mrs. Anna James of Marshfield. He established himself comfortably in Scituate, with his growing family about him. No drawing of the home he built exists today but the fact that it stood for almost two hundred years, sheltering eight generations of his descendants, is sufficient proof that its construction was sturdy.

The average dwelling of that place and period was a story and a half structure, built from the nearby timber and covered on the outside with hand split cedar shingles. Some times there was a full upper story, overhanging the first by a foot and a half. Sills were of oak and plates and studding usually of walnut. One immense chimney commonly centered the structure with fireplaces opening into the various rooms, both upstairs and down. A little front entry often opened directly on stairs that wound quaintly round about the great chimney, in space saving fashion. The fireplace openings, particularly in the kitchen-living room, were large enough to accommodate cord wood and provide space for a settle at either side, but the heat was diffused unevenly to the rest of the room, so a seat in the warm chimney corner was the choice honor, reserved for age or favored guest. Many brass warming-pans hung beside the hearth. Each was filled with live coals and distributed at night fall to counteract the icy temperature of the family beds. Lighting was solely by candles or by primitive whale-oil or grease lamps.

Furniture was perforce simple and sturdy, but, no doubt, in prosperous families, harkened back to the comfort and even elegance of the well-remembered English homes. Chairs had rush seats but good lines. Drop leaf tables showed the claw and ball foot, and high-boys if not imported as was likely in Capt. Michael's home, were doubtless passable copies of good pieces, made by native workmen. One piece of furniture from that house, if not more, is treasured by the present representative of the Pierce family, Miss Annie Pierce, who in 1935 was still living on in quiet luxury in the old Perry Homestead on a part of the original Pierce grant. This is a corner cupboard, which was removed when Capt. Michael's old home was taken down, in her father's childhood, in the 1830's.

It has charming lines and the quaintly scalloped shelves of those early days. No doubt it graced the far corner of the great living-room of that 17th century house.

The kitchen of those early New England homes was by far the most livable and comfortable winter apartment, with its immense fireplace always warm and cluttered with small kettles on their trivets and spits loaded with roasting meat and fowl. Many three-legged iron pots with tight covers, stood in the hot ashes, and the great kettle on its hanging crane centered all. From the opening door of the Dutch oven, built into the side of the fireplace, came the good fragrance of baking bread and Indian pudding. The big and little spinning wheels stood on the braided rugs, where the leaping flames furnished sufficient light for the deft fingers of the spinners in the long winter evenings, and always the flintlocks hung within easy reach beneath the mantle, with powder horn and bullet pouch close beside.

The menace of Indian raids was part of their daily living. At the time of the earliest settlement, the Indians were docile because of a severe plague that had a few years before, nearly wiped them out. They had neither strength nor will to fight the settlers, and so made mutually advantageous treaties. In two score years, their attitude changed and war was only averted by a convincing show of force from the colonists. The treaty then made lasted another thirty years, during which time the Indian tribes grew much stronger in number and keenly alive to the fact that white invasion and colonization meant red extinction. War to the finish was recognized as inevitable in 1675. In December, Scituate sent all her able bodied men, including Capt. Pierce, against the entrenched Indians. A sharp engagement was fought near Warwick and Swansea. Meanwhile raids of allied Indian tribes were harassing Scituate and neighboring settlements, defended, in the absence of the militia, only by youths and old men. The expedition finally returned having been only partially successful. A garrison and stockade were established and the winter wore slowly on. In March of 1676

Captain Pierce marched out into Patuxet where he was given to understand, the Indians had gathered in large numbers. His little force was pitifully small. He had sixty-three Englishmen and twenty friendly Cape Cod Indians, while according to Drake's Indian Chronicles, the hostile Narragansets numbered close to a thousand.

Being a sensible man and aware that the odds were against him, Captain Pierce set his house in order and in impressive words, stated in his will under date of January 15, 1675-

"I, Michael Pierce of Scituate, in the government of New Plymouth in America, being now by the appointment of God, going out to war against the Indians, doe make this my last will and testament. First I doe committ myself and ways unto the eternal God, nextly, concerning that estate which God has blessed me with, I thus dispose:-" with various bequests following in due order. Under the rules of the old Colonial and Provincial laws, the eldest son was given a double portion, this taking the place of the laws of entail and primogeniture, still existing in England. So Michael's widow, being provided with living arrangements, his main estate, the homestead in Scituate, his cattle, his boats and all his household goods go to his son, Benjamin, while his son John has a lesser provision in Hingham. The third son, Ephraim having married Hannah Holbrook, daughter of John of Weymouth, had removed to Warwick and become the father of two small sons, Azricum and Ephraim, Jr. These children are tenderly remembered by their grandfather in his will, but Ephraim seems to exemplify in his scanty inheritance the usual fate of the youngest son. Generous bequests of money were the portion of the many daughters, married and unmarried. Thus is evidenced the fact that this younger son of an English family, emigrating, had wrung from the challenging soil of a new world what would be a sizable fortune in our own easier days, and was, indeed, an estate of proportions in the seventeenth century, when money had a greater purchasing power. Some deep satisfactions must have brought comfort to the brave captain's soul as he set down this record and thought on into the future of his people.

Doubtless it was the thought of the small helpless grandsons in the new little home in the frontier settlement of Warwick which stirred the doughty captain to an even prompter response to military need than usual. His own flesh and blood were in the direct path of the Red Danger. He marched swiftly forth with his little army and presently occurred what proved to be the greatest calamity the Plymouth Colony knew during the Narraganset War. For Captain Pierce came upon the Indians and altho he knew he was outnumbered, "he, being a man of Resolute Courage, was willing to engage them upon never so great Disadvantage". It was this very resolute, not to say, reckless, courage which was his undoing. Realizing his danger, he sent a messenger to Providence for reinforcements. The story goes, that the messenger, it being Sunday, attended Divine services before delivering the letter. The two hours, thus delayed, marked the downfall of the brave captain. He had already pushed slowly and steadily forward, had crossed the Blackstone River and come into conflict with the Indians near present day Attleboro-Gore. No sooner was the engagement commenced, than he discovered that he had been ambushed. To fly was impossible, to retreat in order, equally desperate. His only recourse was to fall back upon the River and make the sacrifice of himself and his brave men as costly as possible to the foe. The Indians divided their forces and attacked from the rear, whereupon the English set themselves back to back and fought until nearly every man fell. In the two hours, while the false messenger sat through the long Puritan service, the brave old captain, fifty of his English friends and ten of his friendly Cape Cod Indian fell on the banks of the River. However, the "hostiles" had been mowed down in great numbers before them and in this bloodiest battle of the Indian wars in New England, their power was broken.

Particularly was this true because the earlier half of the eighteenth century marked a cul-de-sac in the development of the continent. The Indian menace was, it is true, removed from New England, but it existed in an even greater degree in New York. There it was constantly fanned into flame by the French, always jealously hoping to dispossess the English of their colonies. Later, this menace came to its most brutal culmination as the British, themselves, directed the Indian atrocities against the rebelling colonists, in the Revolutionary War. So, far about a century, few left the comparative safety of established settlements in New England for the more dangerous frontier, farther west.

This was necessary, too, to repair the inroads made upon the manpower of the established colony and their material possessions. In Scituate and in all the other settlements, the Indians had come repeatedly, burning, pillaging, and murdering all that was without the stockades and garrisoned sections. Dwellings were burned, cattle destroyed, and crops trampled out. Following the death of King Philip, the returning freemen found ashes and devastation everywhere. In Scituate, some of the most promising and valued citizens had been killed, twenty-three building had been leveled by the red-skin torch, mothers, widowed, were left to struggle with bringing up their large families and the town itself had incurred a staggering debt of nearly eight hundred pounds. The second generation of American settlers was set the task of restoring what had been destroyed and they went at it with resolution and Patience.

Right well did Benjamin Pierce, remaining in Scituate, discharge his responsibility. From Benjamin's will, made in 1729, we conclude that fortune, helped by hard work, favored him. He leaves to his own eldest son, Benjamin, Jr. the Scituate estate, intact, as he received it from his father, Michael, and makes bequest of other acquired lands and houses to his remaining five sons, also an equalizing bequest of cash to his only surviving daughter, Jerusha. So was the original grant passed from eldest son to eldest son until nine generations of the descendants of the Indian fighter have dwelt upon and tilled these same acres with a rare devotion. Benjamin expressed himself in his will in cultured terms and with a clear and legal mind at the age of eighty-three. Having married the second time, the evitable wealthy widow, Elizabeth Adams Perry, sister of his first wife, Martha Adams, daughter of James, he takes care "in primis" to give and bequeath back to her "all that estate she brought me in marriage" with the addition of "thirty pounds in bills of credit by covenant agreed upon before marriage." He suggests that she quit all claim to the latter item and accept detailed living provisions, he has made for her comfortable maintenance, with his executing son Elisha. Then, touchingly, he says, "furthermore, I give my wife, freely, my little Irish spinning wheel to dispose of as she pleaseth."

After all, paint the picture pleasingly as we will, there were few comforts and almost no luxuries in those days. "Things" had greater significance when they were so hardly come by and those who had anything to will away went about it methodically. Wearing clothes in particular were designated to the proper recipient. Both sentimental and practical interest attached to the disposal of Benjamin's "trundle bed and chest, the Doggs of Iron, ye firetongs and shovels, and my small box" as well as "certain firelocks" to grandsons named for him. That Benjamin kept close to the high Puritan traditions of his distinguished father, is, I think, made evident in the preamble of this will, authentically inscribed by his own hand. It is worthy our careful reading.

"Will of Benjamin Pierce"

"In the name of God, Amen. This fourth day of November, Anno Domini One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twenty Nine. In the third year of his Majesty's reign, & C.

I, Benjamin Pierce of Scituate in ye County of Plymouth in New England, Gentleman, being of sound mind and memory (Blessed be God for it) do make and ordain this, my last will and testament in manner and form following, viz.

First of all, I commend my soul to God that gave it and my body to decent burial at the Discretion of my executor hereafter named.

And as touching my worldly estated which God hath allowed me, all my just debts and funeral charges being first and fully paid, I give devise, and dispose of ye same in manner and form following - "

So ends the first chapter of life in a new land for these ambitious English gentlemen. They were a far-seeing lot, ready to make strange ventures and undertake large issues. They gained a strong foot-hold in a perilous new continent and may even be said to have established themselves magnificently.

CHAPTER II

Introducing Great-Grandmother Martha Pierce

For all of a hundred years, life set narrower bounds for the descendants of the adventuring Cpt. Michael Pierce. As we have said, Ephraim, although the youngest of the Captain's three sons, had married much earlier than his brothers and moved out of his home neighborhood. He went, however, to an old settlement. Warwick is reckoned as one of the oldest towns in Rhode Island, having been incorporated in 1647.

The influence of Roger Williams was, of course, very strong in the Colony and it is only to be expected that the Pierce line from now on becomes ardently Baptist. Ephraim was made a freeman in the Providence Colony in 1681. He and his wife both died in 1719, having had eight children. The second son, Ephraim, Jr., through whom our line descends, born in 1674, grew up in a home much simpler than his grandfather had achieved. No doubt his educational opportunities were few. Private teaching was the rule at that time, and lads were prepared in that way for what education Harvard and Yale could afford. Already some of this generation of Pierces were returning to the old home in Scituate for educational advantages. However, Ephraim, Jr. was very young when he married Mary Lowe and removed a short distance to Rehoboth and Swansea, Mass. There their oldest son, Mial, a contraction for Michael, which appears frequently from this point in family annals, was born on April 24, 1692. He grew to manhood and married Judith daughter of Judge Ellis, who was six years older than himself. They had nine children, most of whom lived very interesting lives, despite the restrictions of their times.

Mial, was known as "Deacon Perce", and was probably a lay exhorter of the Baptist faith. His son, Nathan, married a "managing" woman from a staunch Baptist family, became a Baptist preacher and for forty years preached in one church. He was succeeded by his son, the Revered Preserved Pierce, who also preached from the same pulpit forty years longer. A few years ago the church was still standing and was known as the Pierce Meeting House. The sun laid soft, slanting rays across the new-cut grass in the old Burying Ground when we visited it in 1935. There we found the generations of the Pierces, lying at peace, with their good deeds recorded on ancient tombstone of blue-grey slate. There were lofty stones for the Brethren, carrying words of eloquence, but the stones of their wives were small and meek of language, as became the Sisters.

In the village, a few quaint houses clustered about the white spires Congregational Church, and we became aware that NewEngland towns are really townships. Here in Rehoboth, we found that there were also a North Rehoboth and a South Rehoboth, independent of each other and miles apart, and we fled from our own confusion. Here, too, we found that Pierce is rightly pronounced to rhyme with terse and one betrays his distant origin by using an elongated double vowel. The ripe beauty of a late summer day made the country side so charming that it seemed ungrateful to note that the soil was really poor and the crops scanty. Deacon Mial and wife Judith would have been put to it to have provided a good living for their lively family from even a large acreage of such farming land. Nor did preachers in those days collect a salary in that neighborhood. Ministers, called by the Puritan colonists, came on a settled stipend. A lay preacher among the Baptists made his own living on weekdays, preached to the glory of God on the Sabbath, and was grateful if an occasional parishioner left a shilling in his palm with the Sunday handshake.

However, fortunes were made in little Rehoboth in those days. We have the evidence of the will left by John Budlong, Jr., who married Tabitha Pierce, great-granddaughter of Capt. Michael and left an estate inventoried at fourteen thousand, two hundred and sixty-nine pounds, eleven shippings and six pence. Tabitha worked hard, no doubt, and we know she obligingly died young, giving John the opportunity to marry the inevitable wealthy widow, Mistress Renew Moon, yet how this almost unbelievable fortune was amassed we do not know. It is often said that ninety percent of the colonists settling on the New England coast were farmers until after the Revolution. That is a misleading half-truth. It is true that they lived on farms and the farms furnished a living, but they made their money in trade. All sorts of industries and manufacturies were growing up rapidly and trade between colonies and between countries boomed. A clever man could make his capital earn for him then, as now. The clothes of the period reflected its material prosperity. The preachers had to keep hard at the vanities of gay bonnets, so immense they hid the worshipful expressions of their hearers, and gowns of brocades brought in by the clipper ships doubtless became the beauty of Dame Judith well.

Mial and Judith's family numbering nineteen not large for the times. In fact a large family was always considered an asset in the days when they raised their own help. It was the fashionable thing to have many children and a kind of approbrium attached to lean households. A new baby every other spring was the normal procedure. They came without fuss or feathers and with such rabbit-like regularity that there was not much more excitement over a "lying-in" than the making of an apple pie. Just so, Judith's eldest, Ephraim born in 1712 was succeeded at due intervals by Wheeler and Nathan, Mary and Judith, Mial, Job, Caleb and Joshua. We find no record of the good Deacon's worldly estate but we do know that he and Judith bequeathed some stirring and energetic spiritual qualities to their offspring. Son Mial became a captain and son Job a lieutenant of militia serving in the French wars. We have spoken earlier of Nathan who became a preacher. Nathan's son and namesake, recorded as silversmith as well as farmer, enlisted in a regiment of the Green Mountain Boys in 1776. He was one of those unfortunate officers ordered to join Benedict Arnold in his futile siege of Quebec under date of April 9, 1776 that all his men but two were down with smallpox and he himself had made a partial recovery. But he died in the pest camp on the Island of the Three Sisters on May 19, leaving his young wife and four small children.

There was much to talk about in the Pierce family councils and there was plenty of excitement over world politics and colonial policies. Rivalry was intense between the various colonies and sections, and if everything else failed there was keen anxiety over the state of religion at all times. Deacon Mial had a grandson Isaac who lived with him even after he married. Isaac was properly brought up and joined his grandfather's church at eighteen, having already fought in the Revolutionary War. But at twenty-five he went to hear, for the second time, a Universalist preacher and was promptly excommunicated from his own Society. He must have had a genuine desire to investigate the new doctrine for it took much effort to make one's way by ox-cart, on foot, or, if lucky enough to own a horse, on horseback to the unheated meeting house of their period, where they sat for a long morning session, ate some bread and cheese among the tombstones, and returned for an equally long session in the afternoon. Nor was there a girl at the bottom of the matter, for Isaac, you have noted, was already married.

What brought about the migration at this period just preceding the Revolution we do not know. It was of a family nature, one brother Caleb going to Black Rock, Schoharie County, New York, another, Simeon, to Hall's Hollow, New York, and a third Levi, to Buffalo. We do know that through all of the ups and downs of that hard and brutal period, Sylvester stayed in Durham and prospered. He died in 1829 at the ripe old age of ninety, the father of fourteen children. His wife was prophetically named Patience. It has been said that the wives and daughters of the settlers baked and brewed industriously while the men folks hewed, but it was the hewing alone that went into the records. Yet nothing can change the score of the record in the Pierce family Bible, of the eight daughters and six sons Patience bore to Sylvester in the last quarter of the eighteenth century. The bearing and rearing of children is after all the oldest and most indispensable of occupations, altho it never seems to win any laurels from the world at large. Much of human interest may be described in the appended roster of brothers and sisters of our great-grandmother Martha Pierce.

With Martha, Independence child, ends our keenest interest in the Pierce line. A woman now becomes the genealogical link in a genealogy which ignores women. Her gay and indomitable spirit, keenly alive at the age of sixty-eight in spite of innumerable early hardships and ready for further adventure on a new frontier, sums up the fine qualities of her forebears. Let us call the roll of the Pierces, picturing them all in our minds eye: Michael the First of Scituate, Ephraim the second of Warwick, Ephraim, Jr. the Third of Rehoboth, Deacon Mial the Fourth and Caleb the Fifth, still of Rehoboth, Sylvester the Sixth of Durham, N.Y. and in the forefront Martha of Durham and Broadalbin, N.Y., as she was in 1844, a tiny little figure in her linsey-woolsey, the decent black of a widow-woman. In her clever little cap and silver bound specs with silken cape and plain basque, buttoned down the front, she seems scarcely the figure for a long hard journey by wagon train to the prairies of Illinois, with a log cabin, to be raised, at the end of the journey. Old age loves the warm chimney corner and the gossip of contemporaries. Because Martha chose to endure the certain hardships with her family for the few years more, she might reasonably hope to claim, she is a significant figure. Cheerful and courageous, her spirit and her counsel became the heart of the enterprise and Capt. Michael lived again in this grand-daughter, six generations removed. Meanwhile, let us trace the beginnings of another family dynasty in New England, and try to understand the migrations which moved whole neighborhoods from New England into New York. A blacksmith, bearing the not uncommon name of Hall, came from England, sometime after sixteen hundred and thirty, and settled near Providence, R.I. with his wife, seven sons and one daughter. He set up his forge and became, with his sons, an important part of the economic structure of the infant colony, founded by the great liberal, Roger Williams. The craftsmanship of the smiths was vital to the industry and political life of the colonies. The smiths of those days were not farriers, shoeing horses and oxen, although that they attended to, of course, but iron workers of trained skill, forging not only the furnishings for the fireplaces, trivets and cranes, pothooks and firedogs, kettles and all the rest, but all the hardware for building houses and barns and sailing vessels, and for the ox-yokes and great ox-carts that provided inland transportation. Many of the smiths were makers of fine arms also. Iron and coal for the forges were imported from England until seventeen hundred, when iron ore was dug and smelted from mine weamps on the coast. Charcoal was always made in the colonies. A successful shop was a small factory, needing a large force of helpers and having a large output even in the earliest times. With the development of whaling into one of the great businesses of the world, blacksmithing reached its highest peak. It is easily understood that George Hall's seven fine sons were potential wealth and that such a lucrative business would be handed down from father to eldest son for many generations.

In 1637 Providence was still only a name for God's goodness in having led Roger Williams from the midst of constant turmoil, which it must be said in all fairness he had himself created, in Salem and Plymouth, to the shelter of the friendly Massasoit on the shores of Narraganset Bay. We may picture it in that earliest time as nothing more than a few rough-hewn cabins, set in a wilderness of pine trees coming down to the water's edge. About the cabins, there were half cleared spaces and stumps of trees with a web of paths leading from doorstep to doorstep and from the water spring on the hillside to the tideland on the seashore. Here a few men and women with their children about them were busy with a multitude of tasks in establishing their homes and fortunes. George and his family fdt at home. It may be strongly suspected that if the Halls did not come directly from Wales they came from a nearby English shire and were joining old neighbors. The smithing business throve and generation followed generation until we find another George Hall born in 1744, having a brother Joshua and two sisters, Abigail and Alsey. The sisters married, lived and died in Rhode Island, but Joshua moved to Hancock, Mass. and thence to Arlington, Vt. where the old tale says he "left a numerous progeny."

We concern ourselves only with George, who during his minority worked with his father at the ancestral forge. He had married Ruth Nichols, the daughter of a Baptist minister, and had three children, Benjamin and John, and a girl who died at birth, as did his young wife. In the fall of 1772 George married for his second wife, Rachel Briggs, and on December 14, 1773 Abigail Cary Briggs was born. Meanwhile, Rachel's father, Capt. Thomas Briggs, had moved to South Berlin, known then as Hoosock Hollow in Rensselaer County, New York. Evidently George's blood was stirring towards owning his own business for when his well-to-do father-in-law wrote him that he would make him a deed to twenty acres of land known as Cherry Hill if he wanted to try his luck at blacksmithing in a new location, George accepted the offer, packed his all in an ox-cart and made the journey of a hundred and fifty miles, through the wilderness, in two weeks, with almost incredible fatigue.

Rachel Briggs had good blood in her veins. On her father's side she was descended from that John Briggs who, four generations before, had established this Quaker family in the early seventeenth century, in North Kingston and Newport, Rhode Island. On her maternal side, she claimed as her first ancestor on these shores, John Coggeshall, first president of the Providence plantation, who died in that office November 27, 1648. The Coggeshall family were founders of the first Friends Society in Rhode Island. Quakers were greatly hated in those days and were persecuted and harried from the Massachusetts colonies. But those Puritans, who had now become Baptists, had been taught well by Roger Williams, the modern principle of tolerance for religious worship. So the "plain people" thrived in that welcome atmosphere. Long and intimate friendships between succeeding generations of the Hall and Briggs families, the one so consistently Baptist and the other as strongly Quaker, must have been cemented in this union.

With the migration of George Hall and his new wife to Cherry Hill the traditions of the Colony Founders were carried a few miles further westward, on the long push of the frontier, as more and more new land was claimed for the English speaking race. It is easy to write of those days. It was hard to live them. Every step was made in the face of savage resistance. Incredible energy was needed to win the struggle with the austerities of nature. Equally incredible courage was needed to face the constant threat of Indian reprisal, as their tribes were pushed back from the first narrow holdings along the coast, step by step across New England and beyond the Hudson. Rachel and George with baby Nabby and the two little boys were invading the very stronghold not only of their ancient enemies the Algonquins, but of the fierce Iroquois as well. These tribes were already aroused by the French and Indian wars and were ripe to become the paid tools of the Tories as the threats of colonial rebellion against the political manipulations of the home government began to rumble through the settlements.

Hardly had great-great-grandfather Hall settled his little family comfortably in their new and pleasant home on Cherry Hill than the Revolution broke out. Presently George Hall found himself, whether he would or not, in the thick of one of the decisive campaigns of the entire war. The year was 1777. Since May, the rumours had been coming that Burgoyne at the head of an army of over eight thousand British regulars was on the march from the North straight down the Champlain Valley. His Indian allies, recruited from the feared and hated Five Nations, were loosed for pillage and rapine. Under the infamous St. Leger, they were being sent through the Mohawk Valley to strike the American forces on their flank and rear. In fear, the farmers had put in their crops and harvested them. Now assured of food for the winter, they were ready and anxious for action. Burgoyne himself planned the initial attack at Bennington, just a few miles away from Cherry Hill. When news of the intended attack filtered through to the surrounding counties, the farmers of the entire countryside rushed to arms to defeat Burgoyne and to prevent his joining forces with General Howe moving up from New York City. Such a junction would have terminated the struggle of the colonies for liberty, immediately and finally.

George Hall, then thirty years of age, volunteered with many of his neighbors. The old family record says "he left his farm, committed his little family to the care of the Great Arbiter of Events, and shouldering his musket marked to the front to defend and portect the liberties of his country." He served in Colonel John H. Bateman's regiment of militia where he had been superintendent of a class. The battle was joined at Bennington on August 16, George Hall serving as quarter-master-sergeant at this time. The struggle was one of the most stubborn in the war. The farmer militia stood to their guns like veterans. The Indians fled in panic. The British with their paid Hessians were almost annihilated and Burgoyne was completely demoralized. The battle of Bennington is called one of the decisive battles of the Revolutionary War, but it did not at once end the conflict in that region for George Hall and his farmer comrades. The snake was scotched but his back was not completely broken. Burgoyne recruited his strength and returned to join the issue on September 19, near the village of Stillwater on Bemis' Heights. He attacked in three columns, his center charging up a ravine to turn the American left which consisted of three thousand troops, largely the farmer militia. The ground was lost and won a dozen times in the surging charges of the day, but the English regulars were checked by the farmers who refused to be panicked, whether by Canadian bushrangers, Indian ambushes or the mercenary troops hurled against them. The issue remained, however, still undecided at the end of this day's hard fighting.

Burgoyne entrenched again. American scouts cut off his forage and supplies on every side, the farmers helping. On October 7, battle was again joined in the second action at Bemis' Heights. This time the English were overwhelmingly defeated, and Burgoyne's redcoats began their retreat to Saratoga Heights where they surrendered, bag and baggage, on October 17. The Hudson Valley was now in possession of the Colonials. Their work well done, the victorious army of farmers melted away as rapidly as it had gathered.

Three decisive battles in the Revolutionary War fall to the special credit of farmer militia. "Enbattled farmers" made the first stand for liberty at Lexington in 1775. They saved the colonies from utter defeat at Bennington in 1777, and finally at King's Mountain in 1780 they brought forth another unbelievable victory from an almost hopeless situation. The secret of their success lay in the fact that farmer militia had organized for the emergencies of frontier life as second nature for a century and a half. The disappearance of the force which had fought was as curious and phenomenal as their appearance. A great army melted away insensibly, as company after company quietly detached itself and marched back to their frontier homes. The red tape of military records was lightly regarded, hence the historian's difficulties.

So George Hall returned to his little family, their lives and property saved, and resumed his everyday tasks. It is safe to say that the events of those crowded two months of constant fighting, scouting and guarding made of him a different man for all the years that followed. He had taken an active part in every engagement from Bennington to Saratoga Heights and had crowded more actual fighting into that brief campaign than falls to the lot of many a soldier in a long campaign. Rachel's first son Clark, had been born on March 17 and the smiles of the babe of eight months must have rejoiced his father's heart at his homecoming. From this time on George seems to have lived happily, surrounded by his increasing family, until his death in 1822. On June 7, 1779 his namesake, George, through whom our line descends, was born. On March 26, 1781 Elizabeth arrived and on April 18, 1783 the daughter who bore her mother's name, Rachel. There were added to the family circle on succeeding dates Alice, Briggs, Reuben, Diana, Thomas and Caleb. We have no record whether the Cherry Hill farm land was sufficiently productive for this patriarchal group. We do know that the settlements made by the men from Rhode Island and Connecticut did not hold them long. We find the generation born there, reaching out Westward, sometimes by the length of a county, again by the breadth of the state. Just so several of George and Rachel's children, on marrying, settled farther west at Hancock, on West Mountain, in Delaware County, New York. George and Rachel spent their declining years with them, died and were buried there. One child alone may have given the old soldier an aching heart, for it is related that Clark Hall, that infant who found shelter in his Quaker mother's arms while his father "took up arms to end their sea of troubles" later "married Susannah Townsend, removed to Canada, and there held important positions under the British Crown." Generations later, hatred of the Tories still seemed as instinctive in Hall descendants as hatred of the scalping, thieving redskins of their New York experience.

Now George Hall, his father's namesake, was a child of the Revolution also, and grew up in times that continued to require the exercise of every faculty for survival. He married Polly Hall, perhaps a cousin, and settled in Herkimer County in New York, but was crowded too far north of the rich Mohawk Valley land to prosper greatly. Nine children, a usual quota, were born to them, the fourth being a daughter named Mary for her mother but called according to the fashion of the time, Polly in childhood, Aunt Polly and Grandmother Polly to the day of her burying. Her brothers and sisters were Oliver, Rachel, Clark, Matilda, Amanda, Gaylord, Elsa and Henry. Of them all, no one died near his birthplace. The migratory instinct took most of them far afield. The birthplace of our Grandmother Polly is known to have been in Norway near Rome, New York in 1811 and there she married in March of 1832 a young man by the name of Washington Lanphere, the son of our great-grandparents George and Martha Pierce Lanphere. Washington Lanphere was born March 31, 1807 in Broadalbin, Montgomery County, New York. His Christian name was a not uncommon memorial to the stirring events that had made up the lives of the generation before, and marked as well the veneration in which the entire countryside held the "father of our country." Cromwells and Calvins found their way into many a Puritan family, along with Mercy and Pardon and Peace, these latter two names being considered peculiarly applicable to twins. So in the opening years of the nineteenth century the name of Washington was apt to be bestowed on one child in every family connection.

The path of any genealogist is beset by many pitfalls. He often finds himself both tired and cross as he tries to disentangle the web of threads centering in any one person of the present generation, and attempts to trace each thread back into the more and more obscure time of beginning. But how his day is lightened when he finds just one good story caught in the amber of historical accounts of a great host of folks of his own lineage and the countless other families, allied and interwoven with his line. So I give you this brief record of our Martha's Great-Uncle John, who enlisted for "duration of the war" the next day after the Battle of Lexington. He, lacking yet three months of being nineteen, shouldered the musket which was every boy's birthright in Colonial days and marched into Boston from Franklin, Mass. not many miles away. He fought in the Battle of Bunker Hill and served in the siege of Boston under General Washington. He followed his hero to the battles of Brandywine and Trenton, and went with him through the awful winter of 1777-78 at Valley Forge, acting as his orderly and dispatch bearer, particularly to General Green. He was with Washington and Green through the heart-breaking final southern campaign, fighting at Camden and Cowpens and Eutaw Spring. He finished with General Washington at the Siege and Surrender of Yorktown.

Returning to his hometown after these Homeric years, he married Mary Gilmore and settled down, as the village shoemaker, to enjoy the fruits of hard won peace. Attending church one day, he heard the preacher pray for the Mother Country and for pardon for those who had taken up arms against her. You may guess the veteran soldier bore it ill. The next day when the good Doctor Emmons brought his shoes to be mended, John Pierce threw them out of the door with the pungent remark "you ---- unmentionable----- old tory! If you had served eight years in the army as I did you would not have made that prayer. I went without shoes at Valley Forge, you can go without them now!" The record goes on to say "They made it up after a while, although Mr. Pierce always felt a little riled if politics were mentioned."

With this digression we return to Washington Lanphere and his wife Polly Hall on their little farm north of Mohawk Valley. The hopes of securing a fortune or even a competence from the hills and valleys of the still frontier state of New York which had led to the wholesale migration of the Yankees, as New Englanders had already been named in the years just before the Revolution, were not being realized. The Dutch had long before established great entailed estates all up and down the rich valley of the Hudson. Pushing on into the center of the State, the Yankees found the Palatine German farmers in possession of the best lands of the Mohawk Valley. Here and there, the Yankees spread out on the hillsides north and south of the valley and attempted with real heroism, the conquest of the stony soil and the encroaching forests. They were lonely, too, away from their own country. There was no kinship between New York and New England. New Yorkers did not speak the same language nor think the same thoughts about anything, least of all religion. New York was occupied then as now by a hodgepodge of races, Dutch, and Germans, Swedes, and French, and even Finns. In the days before the Revolution all laws of the state were necessarily printed in three languages. One has only to read again the authentic tales of James Fennimore Cooper to be reminded of many forgotten facts.

Washington Lanphere with his young wife Polly, went north to West Leyden in Lewis County. They cleared the virgin timber from a little tract of land and set the great stone before the door of the little home they built from the trees closing greedily in on them from three sides. They tried with truly heroic efforts to wrest a living from the scanty soil whence all the fertility was washing down to the Palatinate settlers below. Here their oldest son, Orin, was born March 16, 1833. The second son, George D., was born there also on May 2, 1835. The third son, Oliver, however, was born in Courtland County, farther to the south on June 3 in 1837. The little sister, Loiza, who died in infancy, was born October 13, in 1839. Julia was added to the family circle on October 16, 1840 and Jesse April 7 in 1843. Washington and Mary had found it impossible to win even the barest sustenance from the poor farming land about West Leyden. Long years after their youngest daughter born on the rich Illinois prairie farm of their later years, hunted out the little abandoned clearing and found the old door-stone still there, altho the rotting sills of the cabin had long since let its structure fall into complete ruin. She spoke in words of pity and horror of the unequal struggle waged there by her youthful parents.

Moreover while the Erie Canal was going through, from 1817 to 1825, the character of the country seemed to become even more alien to them. They watched the digging of the Big Ditch through the swamps and woods and hill. They saw the shanties going up and gangs coming in, the bog Irish and the niggers, and they hated it all. Trade prospered to the advantage largely of the cities, but the whole situation was more and more distasteful to these landloving folks of pure English descent. Their whole aim was to acquire a freehold and to establish a dynasty in settled English fashion. So though the land in Courtland County may have yielded a somewhat better living than that first poor clearing in Lewis County, Washington

Lanphere reached out for something more secure and promising for his children and his children's children. His youngest brother George had already made his way to Western Illinois and from a little trading post in Warren County had written back of the rich prairie land, waiting to be taken up from government grant. The great Northwest territory was open to settlement and reasonable secure from Indian menace. The whole countryside was aflame with rumours of the wonderful opportunities for the building of fortunes on the western frontier. Many must have been the family councils but few the regrets at leaving a state that had proved unfriendly in its soil, unneighborly in its human relations, and terrifying in its Indian menace.

CHAPTER III

A New Design For Living

It may be assumed that Great-grandmother Martha Pierce Lanphere, with the blood of ancient adventurers coursing in her veins, encouraged the trek of Halls and Lanpheres from York State to the new Western frontier. Born as she had been in 1776, a child of American independence, one of a family of fourteen children in that rough and unsettled time in New York, she must have been forced often to fend for herself, and to make her own decisions. However, she knew the shelter of a comfortable home in her childhood, which we may believe was even a luxurious one in her father's later years. The history of Greene County, New York, census of Durham, year of 1810, reports four people living in Sylvestre Pierce's family at that time, "not including the colored servants or slaves." Sylvester was sixty then. He was born in 1749 and died in 1829, so his life spanned all of the Revolutionary period and the development of the new republic. Most of his fourteen olive branches who had appeared with what must have seemed monotonous regularity to everyone but Patience, the mother, had established themselves here and there in neighboring homesteads. Martha, the third child and second of eight daughters, married at eighteen, a bridge-builder by the name of Nichols, who was killed at his trade, leaving her with an infant son, Jesse. What must have seemed a bad dream to the young girl, was soon forgotten in her marriage within the year, to George Lanphere, a half dozen years her senior. Her first son, Samuel, lived only a few months but Caleb was born in 1799 and named for her Massachusetts grandfather. Her daughter Mary, or Polly as she too was always called, was born in 1803. In 1807 the son Washington, named as many another patriots's son for the great general, was born. Orin was born in 1812, the year of the new war with England, which this time troubled the remote New Yorkers but little. George C., the youngest and most adventuresome of them all, was born June 30, 1814.

Almost from the dates of birth of this little family, they felt the spirit of awakened ambition and unrest in the air about them. The New World was palpably emerging into a new and more prosperous phase. Horace Greeley's oft-quoted admonition "Go west, young man, and grow up with the country" was the slogan of the times. The excitement was comparable to that which had stirred old England in the seventeenth century and sent her children scurrying across the sea. The economic causes leading to further expansion were much the same that lead the earlier Pierces to act. Moreover the security of the strengthening central government was gradually being felt and the great Northwest territory was rapidly being freed from the old menace of marouding Indian tribes. In 1832 Blackhawk had led the last of his raids in Illinois and his power had been broken forever. Blackhawk himself and his followers were on the other side of the Mississippi and the long trail to the rich lands of the Mississippi Valley lay open and safe.

George and Martha's youngest son, George C. had not been satisfied with the future land alone could offer him, in and for itself. He had studied law with an attorney in Booneville, N.Y. There he married Matilda Kent and practiced his profession in Booneville and in Rome. However the call of the West was in his ears so on January 16, 1838, he set out with his young wife, travelling at times by wagon, again by sled, for seven weeks to reach the little trading station in Warren County Illinois known as Monmouth. He found his hopes and those of his family as well, could be realized there and by the slow post of the times, his observations went back to his older brothers and sister. Land which would repay cultivation, was to be had from government grant. It was what they were looking for with their whole hearts. So brother Caleb started on ahead with his already well-grown family. They traveled by horseback and wagon train along the ridge roads that follow the Great Lakes and passed to the south of the thriving little Indian trading station known as Chicago, to Whiteside County. There he halted and settled in 1843. Doubtless the additional report that Caleb sent back made the others more eager to be on their way. In the summer of 1844, Washington, now 37 and Mary, his wife, now 33 years of age, with their five small children, young Orin, a lad of eleven, George, nine, Oliver, seven, Julia, four and Jesse, the youngest, a baby boy of little more than a year, set out on the long and tedious drive across the hills and valleys of northern Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois.

In the little cavalcade were many wagons with their painted canvas covers, probably drawn by oxen. The horses were ridden pillion-fashion, as were some of the oxen, and the milking cattle were driven along. Washington's beloved younger brother, Orin, for whom he named his own first born, came with them, with his wife and children and all his household goods. So did his charming sister Polly, four years older than himself, who had married Ira Barnum. They had with them their little daughter, Martha Paulina and Frances, and their young sons, Orlando and George A. With them all there came with unconquerable spirit and a cheery sprightliness that marked her memory indelibly upon all her grandchildren, Martha Pierce, the little grandmother of almost seventy.

Among their stores and in their memories they carried what they might from the old homes in New York to the unknown new ones on the prairie, little heartaches for the small graves left behind and for old neighbors and relatives they might not see again, some furniture, spinning wheels, a few cherished rosewood chairs, tables and bureaus of cherrywood, their bedding and fire place fittings, and plain clothes. The last quarter century had not been a prosperous one, but beyond that fact, Polly Hall Lanphere had always about her the ways of the Plain People, from whom her grandmother, Rachel Briggs, sprang. Some few thin solid silver spoons, a little fine damask linen, and a few Staffordshire blue dishes of the period were carefully packed among the woolen handwoven coverlids. In our grandmother Polly's heart was a great love for the beauty of flower and bush. In her wagon there came, wrapped as carefully and watered as regularly as was ever Rose Standish's lilac in the hold of the Mayflower, a little assortment of flowering shrubs, which may have had their first start in her bride's garden in West Leyden. Almost fifty years later her same

"laylock" still grew by the south door of the home she and grandfather built in Illinois. Her great crimson hedge rose-bush still filled the air for yards around with its sharp fragrance each summer time. A pretty trailing honeysuckle covered a little slope to the south of the house. The only name it ever had in my childhood was "Washington's Bower brought from York State by your grandmother."

What month and day the little cavalcade started I do not know, nor how long the summer journey took. Doubtless it offered many pleasures and mild adventures to the little company of young cousins running along the way beside the slow moving wagons and stopping to rest at noon beside some stream or in the shade of a patch of woods. At night they must have had gay times at wayside taverns, if the party was lucky enough to make one by sundown, if not, about the campfires. Their elders had, beside the security of a large party in traveling through unsettled country, the solace of the companionship of kinfolks. Family visiting at frequent intervals and at great length was a trait of them all when they were finally established in their new homes.

Their choice of a location for their homesteads is significant. Others settlers coming into Warren County sought water or woods. Those coming from Tidewater, Virginia, particularly longed for water, even if no more than the sluggish sloughs flowing through that part of the country, but not so the York State folk! They had fought and lost the battle with the virgin forest and they hated the sight of a tangle of trees with big stubborn roots and the suckers of second growth about them. The love of bodies of water, great or small, seems never to have moved them since the day Capt. Michael Pierce left Hingham for Scituate, and turned inland from the ocean to pleasant sheltered meadows. Their whole souls longed for rich tillable soil and they had the feel of it at their fingertips. Underneath the tough buffalo grass of the prairies they knew there was soft black dirt, many inches deep, waiting to bring forth rich harvests from the seed they were carefully guarding in their wagons.

In the shade of the cottonwoods on the slightly rolling prairie they stopped their wagons late in July of 1844 for the lasttime. There they lived, until helping themselves from a common piece of timber near at hand, they could put together their cabins. Haste was needed for little Helen Barnum was born just one month after their arrival and July and August are hot months to live in a wagon-tent on the prairies. Ira and Polly Lanphere Barnum, with their family, had settled near enough for great-grandmother Martha to feel that most of her little flock were under her wing for great-uncle Orin with his family too was not far away. One thing they must have missed in their settling in which makes the rudest cabin truly homelike, the great stone chimney with its widespreading fireplace, the very heart of family life, which they had grown used to for many generations. Not a stone would they find in all the prairie 'round, not even clay to "mup up" with. Airtight stoves of sorts were no doubt in use even then in Midwest settlements.

That first autumn in Illinois must have seemed to their fresh vision peculiarly glorious. Prairies have a challenge all their own. Someone has said "it is like the challenge of the fearless candour of very young people." There is a stimulating cleanness in the winds and an uplift in the high clear blue of Illinois skies not found anywhere else. There are no hills or mountains to shut away the sweep of vision to the far-away level of the horizon. Sunrise and sunsets are pageants of tumultuous and glorious color flung wide for mile after mile. More than that there seems to be always a deep serenity and a great simplicity about those midwestern lands. Even the overmastering storms that lash the prairie trees to the very ground with their power, have a dignity of approach, accomplishment and retreat. Indeed, to have been born upon an Illinois farm is to have within oneself an ineradicable love for rain. Farm lands love the rain and farm dwellers find the same great joy of response to a good storm as does the listener to a mighty orchestra when a majestic theme unrolls itself under the baton of a master conductor. The fall of the first heavy drops upon dusty fields and roads, the diapason notes of heavy rolling thunder, the sharp thrust of lightning, the bending of the great trees to the mighty rhythm of the storm, and the soft chorus of birds in the quiet freshness following the downpour is a truly joyous experience. Added to the glory of the skies, whether in fair or stormy weather and the glory of the great sweep of unfenced meadow, there was for them also the more intimate glory of the autumn prairie flowers. Banks of goldenrod and purple horsemint, shining crimson "shoemaker", the gold of resinweed and the purple of cone-flowers set a welcome at their very doorsteps in those early days.

There was plenty to do, however, besides responding to the beauty of the land. There were legal details to be settled first of all. Titles from land grants were always hard to clear and grandfather may not have been too greatly surprised when he was forced to pay three times over before he got a clear title to his first quarter-section. Land in that decade was selling at a dollar and a quarter an acre in general, but hard cash was scarce. We may be sure that it was with a will, the newcomers set about to "break prairie" and begin the accumulation of family fortunes. They were sure at last of an economic reward for their work. They were secure at last from the Indian menace which had dogged the steps of six generations of Pierce and Hall and Lanphere men, and frozen the hearts of their women and children. An occasional brave and squaw were still to be seen in the county, but the last grasp of the tribe had been broken in Blackhawk's defeat twelve years before. At last a man might sow his crop and hope to reap it. He might leave his family in the home he had built for them and not fear to find their scalped dead bodies in the embers on his return. With the Indians, went the great herds of buffaloes. Packs of wolves and droves of deer remained for some time. The wolves were a menace to farm animals and occasionally to people and the deer were very destructive to the young crops. It was a land very rich in game animals and wild fruits and small animals and birds were most abundant. Flocks of pigeons, migrating, darkened the skies and quail and prairie chickens, grouse and wild turkey were common. Raccoons and 'possums, squirrels and rabbits furnished good hunting for the boys of the family. Foxes were numerous and with their cunning lasted on into the twentieth century after much of the wild life was extinct. The flash of the teeny form of a young red fox against a stack of new hay in the fall won forgiveness from many farmers for the loss of a fat hen or even two.

However, that first cabin so hastily put together in the summer of 1844 did not mark the permanent location of the Washington Lanphere family. They remained for a short time only in the settlement at Greenbush which had been made by members of the Hall family a little earlier. Two years later found Washington and Mary established farther north and west on the old cattle trail leading from Ft. Madison to Chicago. This had earlier been a well marked Indian trail running from the banks of the Mississippi to the Great Lakes. Now one question is always uppermost in the mind of a settler in a new land - "Where will the permanent road go through." Communication and transportation are vital things. Grandfather thought he knew as he settled in Tompkins township but he missed his guess by eighty rods. Ben Tompkins of Salters Grove, surveyer for the township, laid out the Old Angling Road from Kirkwood to Monmouth just eighty rods away from the door of his cabin on the Indian trail. So when he could get to it, grandfather built again, some time later. He and his brother Orin and Ira, his brother-in-law and all the boys of the families who were able to help at all were very busy in those first years plowing the prairie land. An early manhood was forced upon boys in pioneer days. Uncle Orin must have been a mere stripling when a neighbor, Mrs. J. F. Guilingier, writes of him in her reminiscences as follows - "Another of my earliest impressions was of the breaking of the prairies with ox teams. Crawford Hogue and Orin Lanphere had a plow and several teams of oxen. For a while they stayed at our house. Children got up early in those times to see them hitch up. They would take a yoke in hand and say "Come Tom and Jerry". They would put their heads through the yoke, clamp it and call Buck and Bill. Each of the oxen knew its name. After eight or ten yokes were ready one of the men would hold the plow and the other the whip and they plowed the prairie." Those are really epic-making words, thrilling to later-day descendants. The plow they used was a clumsy thousand pound affair of steel, the forerunner of the tractor of today. It has a keen interest for us because it was invented in 1837 by one Asahel Pierce of Chicago, directly descended from Capt. Michael. His idea of a steel self-polishing plow to cut sod and stubble was either simultaneously discovered or adopted and developed by every maker of farm machinery after that date.

Furrow after furrow, the men plowed the prairies, claiming the rich soil for cultivation, set up their sod fences to mark the boundaries and plowed the fire furrow beyond. They found they had exchanged the fear of the forest with its lurking savages for the everpresent fear of prairie fires. Great mountains of tumble weed, dry and light as tinder, drifted across the open miles and lodged in masses against the sod fence barriers called ledges. Once let a spark light in the mass and the devouring flames roared across the prairie grass as fast as a horse could run. Hundreds of acres remained unclaimed and uncultivated until after the civil war and herds of horses grazed at will on them. Cattle in those early times were kept herded closely at home. The York state Yankees had brought with them their dairying habits, for cheese and buttermaking had been their chief occupation on their small and unproductive farms on the hills above the Mohawk and hay for their cattle had been their chief crop. It takes a while to drop the old ways and adapt oneself completely to a new environment, so for several years grandfather's barns were full of milk cows and the cheese house in the orchard was a busy place. Later when they fully understood the marvelous possibilities of rich and abundant harvests of wheat and oats and corn, they gladly abandoned the dairy business for which they had no real love and turned to diversified grain farming and to stock feeding and shipping. In those earliest days too it was hard to find a market for produce. However the C. B. & Q. Ry. went through in 1855 as forms a romantic later tale and the development of the country commercially was happily assured thereafter. Before that time, Oquawka, or Yellow Banks, as it was then called, twenty miles away over often impassable roads, was their only shipping outlet, with St. Louis and New Orleans as a final destination. Rivers and canals had their great day in the first half of the nineteenth century. The Mississippi was alive with shipping craft and Oquawka was a boom town doing an annual business in in 1852 of $441,776 in exports and $412,880 in imports.

The Illinois farmer in the middle of the nineteenth century was, to be sure, not particularly dependent upon the markets either for buying or selling. He aimed first of all to make his own small kingdom entirely selfsustaining. The grainfields produced the bread for his family, the orchard the fruit, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry the meat, tallow candles furnished the light, skins of the beef animals made the shoes, the wool of the sheep made the clothes with the help of a little patch of flax, the wood lot furnished fuel for heat and lumber for the buildings and the family furnished their own good times. Little need for cash existed, the barter is always the friendlier and better economy in any country neighborhood. In this little independent kingdom that grandfather and grandmother Lanphere established, certain elemental pioneer virtues also prevailed, perforce. Hard work on the part of everybody was necessary, and work is a healthy thing whether one likes it or not.

Just what year grandfather got around to building his house, known as the Old Home, down on the Angling Road, we do not know, nor when he added the little colony of barns and cribs and sheds, the smokehouse and cheesehouse that quickly gathered around. When he did build, he built to last. Some of the barns still stand, although the Old House was replaced on its original site almost fifty years ago. So sturdily was that Old House built, however, that for most of the half century since it has still stood staunch and firm although put to meaner uses. Now only a fragment of its former self remains for its joists and timbers and siding have been rebuilt into a tool and storehouse. All the northern pine for house and barns was brought from the saw mills in Galena, floated down the Mississippi in rafts and dragged over-land by ox-teams. To the present time, these boards yield up the whitened sand acquired in passage. In the planning and construction, grandfather had the help of his brother Orin, a builder of genuine native ability. Two houses are still standing to testify to the nicety of his sense of proportion and detail and his sound construction. One is his first home on the Angling Road, known as

The Billings Place. The other is the charming square frame house he built later in Kirkwood known as the San Simms house. From the plans of this second house many replicas were built by later generations. Grandfather Washington chose a pleasant site on a little rise of ground for his fine new house and placed the parlor and sitting room, looking south and east across a three cornered green through which a little stream ran. Every spring this slough became a pond, until repeated tiling drained it. The Angling Road ran just beyond, black mud from tire to hub all winter and spring, and deep with the dust of a Sahara the rest of the time. It was certainly much easier to stay home than to go somewhere, and a good riding horse who was also a good swimmer was the surest means of locomotion for a long time.

This home of our immediate forefathers, we know even now only in part. It is slipping into the dim shadows of the memories of the third generation, sheltered under the roof, whose ridge-pole was raised one day at a great gathering of neighbors and old friends. Many more Yankees had come on from York state and no doubt Hogues, and Randalls, Billings' and Guilingers were all there that day, their womenfolks helping with the dinner. The house was as definitely of New England derivation as codfish, baked beans and pie. It was simple in its proportions, with no great architectural appeal except its simplicity and the ampleness of its large and liveable rooms to care for the noisy brood gathered within its walls. Like all such homes it had no front hall, such space in a rigorous climate being hard to heat and of no "living use" to the family. Its front door opened directly into the common living room and from there one door opened back into the parlor bedroom. This was a thoroughly disliked room, stiffly furnished and reserved for formal visitors and formal occasions such as the overnight visit of the preacher, weddings and funerals. Another door led off the sitting room into the cozy little downstairs bedroom belonging to grandmother Polly and grandfather Wash. Another door let into the buttry, a long thin room. This was a dim place according to my childist recollection, lined with shelves and full of enticing smells of salty butter, pungent cheese, spicy mince pies, sugary ginger cookies, fragrant honey, and the incomparable perfume of mellowing winter apples. In spite of these palate tickling odors I was always glad to slip quickly through this mysterious place into the great, sunny, much-scrubbed, pine-floored kitchen with its braided rugs and strips of woven rag carpet, its big old iron cook-stove, its cherry table with drop leaves cheerily covered with a red checked cloth, and its comfortable old wooden rockers and painted side chairs. Geraniums bloomed in the windows and life was always interesting there. A cat tired of its strictly utilitarian existence at the barn might be persuaded to slip through a crack in the door, only to be put to flight by mother's broom. If nothing else happened there was always the song of the old tea-kettle and the loud tick-tock of the big Seth Thomas clock with its painted picture on the lower glass. I was born in the old house and lived in it five happy years before it was moved to make way for the new house in 1890. My memories, though meager, are distinct.

There was another door leading out of the sitting room, straight up a narrow, steep flight of steps, taking as little space as possible in the economy of the house's planning. On the second floor there was ample room for all the brood of boys and girls and all their visiting friends and cousins. There were two large and completely finished bedchambers and an alcove bedroom for the three daughters of the family and the rest was one delightful great open dormitory space given over to the boys of the family. Being sent off to bed was no punishment to them according to tales that have lived on, but the signal for fresh mischief and romping.

Spinning and weaving were daily stints of grandmother and her girls and there must have been a loom room somewhere, either over the kitchen or taking up part of boys big room. The family was larger now. Emmeline was born July 12, 1845, Clarke, August 7, 1848, and the twins Sophronia and Sloan on October 30, 1850. There were nine altogether and grandmother felt her hands were full. Few matrons had any time for airs or introspection in those pioneer days, which reproduced to an exact nicety, all the conditions that had prevailed two hundred and fifty years before in the New England settlements.

As Priscilla Alden spun and wove, so did Aunts Julia and Emmeline, and Aunt Sophronia as well when they could pin her down to it. Youngest of the family, she married early and was spared walking many of the weary miles the spinners trod at the wheels. A good day's work at the great wool wheel it is said meant walking twenty miles back and forth on the hard uncarpeted boards of pine floors. The spinner must stand at her work as she stepped backward and forward, she spun to the rhythm of the old spinning song - "If you a good spinner would be, Bring your hand to the axle-tree". It was weary work but there was a magic in it, too, in the pull of the spindle and the lengthening and strengthening of the yarn. The good spinner had a fine freedom and grace of motion, a long pull and a light touch, and always she took "three little steps forward and back, which might not be shortened to two". Yarn was spun on the old spinning wheel for all the wearing apparel of the family. From this yarn socks and stockings, caps and mittens and mufflers were knitted. Webs of cloth were woven for coats and dresses and window hangings and bedcovers were made as well on the looms. We honor the courage and perseverance for which all this spinning stood and the few existing blankets and coverlets mean much to us who carry on.

You must know that before the yarn could be spun ready for knitting and weaving the wool "had to be raised". Grandfather hated the silliness of sheep as well as the harm they did the land, but wool grandmother must have, so sheep bells tinkled on his farm for most of his lifetime, and sheepshearing came with the turn of the spring. Both black and white sheep, he must have for "pepper-and-salt" for suits for the boys. The burrs must be picked from the fleece and fleece washed clean for the dye-vats. Carding was tedious and spinning the threads slow work. Only then did the spinner approach the real work of creation at the loom. Blankets and coverlets gave scope for lovely design. Long webs of well designed and firmly woven cloth were turned out for men's suits and women's dresses. Next the traveling tailor came through the neighborhood and cut and fitted and sewed by hand. Grandmother and her girls made many of their own garments, but we trust they had help with the outer clothing for seven men. Clothes once made lasted many seasons, styles were long lived and hand-me-downs were always welcome, so that the full wear was gotten out of the last thread of cloth.

The same thing was true of boots and shoes. Hides were tanned well in advance of the yearly appearance of the traveling cobbler and bench and tools stood ready for him. Indeed the sons of the family could resole and patch and mend with the best of the visiting fraternity. Nor did grandmother permit any waste of the fragments. Bits of cloth were patiently made into rugs and bed-comforts. With the coming of cotton prints, a true artistry was made possible in the design of quilts. No proper girl came to her "setting out" for marriage without a chestfull of her own weaving and sewing, and a great tick and pillows of the choicest geese or duck feathers. Added to these larger necessities for the new home were yards and yards of crocheted and knitted lace to adorn her underthings. Fingers flew in those days. Tongues flew too. Visiting was an art.

Pioneer hospitality has become a legend. In fact, it developed into a sort of religion. There are tales of folks coming to spend a night who stayed a year. At any time a few or a number of guests might arrive unannounced. It was a lamentable situation but there was a beautiful spirit back of it. Travel was slow and difficult over those roads. A man could not make it "there and home again" in one day. Moreover, the family were hungry for companionship, and why not take them along? Mother often recalled that all the folks on the road below grandfather's home place would take their corn and wheat to Olmstead's mill to be ground, stopping on their way for dinner with grandmother at noon and on their way home, stopping again for supper and perhaps the night. Grandmother's table was always kept at its full length and was always surrounded. Mother fell heir to the custom without knowing the people and as she tactfully put it "we never went back to see them, so they gradually quit."

It was well that cellar and pantry and smokehouse were always full enough to provision an army for a siege, for it was in reality a siege of hospitality.

In those full and plentiful years some anxieties and sorrows naturally entered as well as many joys. The Mexican War was on. Never were those pioneer family able to lay aside gun and sword with a feeling of finality in the gesture. As we have said George C. Lanphere, coming to Monmouth in Warren County at the age of twenty-one had brought with him his bride, Matilda Kent. Three children born to them there had died in their infancy and were buried in the old "Burying Ground" that still exists, in unkempt condition. At the call to arms in 1847, George C. helped to raise a company and marched with them as their lieutenant into Mexico. At Vera Cruz he came near dying with yellow fever. Another of the Illinois Lanpheres served also with distinction in this war. Geo. J., the son of Caleb of Whiteside County, enlisted as a lad of eighteen. He served during the entire way under Capt. Wyatt B. Stapp, was mustered out, and returned, the sole survivor of his original company. Great grandmother Martha's heart must have beat a fanfare of rejoicing at sight of these returning youthful veterans. Romance resulted too from the family reunion, for Geo. J. married his cousin Paulina Barnum.

Paulina played well her part in pioneer days. No sooner had the Lanphere connection established themselves in their homesteads on the Indian trail than they, with their few neighbors, built the first schoolhouse in Tompkins Township and school that winter of 1847 was taught by Paulina Barnum "for five dollars per month and boarded round". So numerous were the Georges in the Lanphere connection that when Paulina retained permanently the one from Whiteside County, he was given the name Buttles, for ease of identification. However, when the young matron was addressed as Mrs. Buttles, the use of this means of distinction was curtailed by her displeasure. In later years this family followed the retreating frontier to Utica, Nebraska.

In the meantime Geo. C. having already prospered in his profession and served one term as County Judge in Warren County, moved on his return from Military service, in November 1848, to the neighboring town of Galesburg. There he was elected Co. Judge in 1849, being the first incumbent under the law establishing that office. The result was contested because of his too brief residence and taken to the courts with an adverse decision. A new election was called. George C. was again nominated and again elected and served with distinction, his term expiring in 1853. During this time he established his business in drugs. In 1855 he received his appointment as post-master of Galesburg. This was during the latter part of Franklin Pierce's administration. The press accounts of the day state that "Judge Lanphere owed his appointment in no slight measure to the influence of Stephen Douglas who was his personal friend". In 1858 he was removed by President Buchanan. Douglas had by that time so modified his opinions on the slavery question as to antagonize the President who punished him by removing his friends from office.

Of more apposite interest to the family history is the part that George C. played in 1855 in securing the "Chicago, Burlington and Quincy" Railroad for Galesburg, Monmouth, and incidentally to the benefit of all the land interests of his large family connection in Warren County. George C. had as his co-laborers in this organization, known as the Central Military Tract, Hon. W. S. Gale, Hon. C. S. Colton, Silas Willard and others well known in those early days of State and County history. He was nominated and elected to the State legislature on this issue and secured the charter giving the new company right to connect with any road running into Chicago, thus opening up transportation to the entire community. In the final organization of the enterprise, he was chosen attorney for the C. B. & Q. and retained the position for many years. With what pride our great grandmother Martha must have watched the ambition and energy of this restless youngest son of hers, come to its fruition.

The Mexican War been over for a decade but trouble between the North and South was brewing year by year. The Pierces you may have noted were always a politically minded family, bearing office wherever they established. The historian Babson once wrote "young ducks do not take to water with more eagerness than Pierces to politics." Religion and politics were indeed twin lodestars of their lives. The Lanpheres and Halls were much less politically minded. So I believe the tales heard in my childhood that it was great grandmother Martha who kept abreast of the political times in those dark days and devoured with hungry zest every scrap of news that filtered through. But mercifully, after her long full life, she was spared the full sorrow, anxiety and tragedy of the terrible Civil War. She died on July 12, 1859 and was buried in the old cemetery in Monmouth where her son Geo. C. and his young bride Matilda Kent had laid their first three little ones. There, too lies Ezekiel Kent, father of Matilda Kent Lanphere.

Meanwhile in the midst of lowering warclouds, the children of Washington and Mary (Hall) Lanphere were growing up and marrying off. On October 14, 1858, Orin Lanphere married Emily Randall whose family had come from Otsego County, New York, in 1849. On November 8, 1860, Geo. D. married Jane Wright who was born in Adams County, Ohio and removed to Warren County, Illinois in 1857. In 1862 the Civil War was an actuality. Oliver volunteered in the 83rd Illinois Regiment. Two weeks later on August 11 he married Caroline Duncan whose family had come to Kirkwood from Painesville, Ohio, in 1860. That same August 11 witnessed another wedding--in fact it was a double wedding. Young Geo. A. Barnum, son of Polly Lanphere Barnum, married Celia Atkins, born in Lewis County, New York, in 1843. George, too, had volunteered in Company F of the 23rd Illinois Regulars two weeks earlier. His nineteen year old bride went to the front with him and spent three heroic years nursing through the Southern campaigns. Oliver's bride also accompanied him and served as a volunteer in those days of untold hardship in Pioneer Nursing. Those were dark days for families and friends. Blood bonds held very close and a pathetic reminder is the little picture taken of the "small boys" of the family, Clark and Sloan, to send to their soldier brother at the front. All the story of Illinois pioneering is in their homespun, homemade suits and cowhide boots.

Life went on somehow, during those terrible years of war, and Jesse married December 14, 1863, younger than his brothers at the age of his marriage. The older lads had married at twenty-five, which seems to have been the average marrying age of Lanpheres and Pierces for several generations. Jesse at the age of twenty married Emmeline Billings of the old West Leyden neighborhood in New York. On September 28, 1865, just as the war was over and the soldier boys safe at home again, Julia married Moses Gregory. On October 6, 1870, Sophronia, at twenty, married Theodore Billings who had come on from West Leyden in 1864. On November 14, in 1871 Emmeline married John Stinemate, sone of William and Martha Rusk Stinemate. He was born in Knox County, Ohio and came to Warren County in 1853. In 1862 he had enlisted in Company E of the 16th Iowa Volunteer Infantry and he saw active service until the end. Marching with Sherman to the sea, he was made prisoner in Atlanta, Ga., in 1864 and for nine months was in Andersonville Prison, an experience of which he was loathe to speak to the end of his days.

The occasion of the wedding of John and Emmeline on November 14, 1871 was the last of the joyous gatherings which for a quarter of a century had made up almost the whole of the clannish social life of the family, wherein grandfather Washington Lanphere had always been the head and center of the festivities. On February 2, 1872 he died, a comparatively young man, at sixty-five. About this time a great desire had taken possession of the family circle to have their portraits painted. They had all prospered and could afford it. So they sat to a certain Miss Snively, a "journey-man" painter, come up from Virginia. The really well executed portrait of Grandfather Lanphere shows a face as British as an English squire from his piercing eyes under shaggy brows and his firm set lips but generous mouth to his mutton-chop whiskers and rather elegant, although ill-fitting clothing. This fact which seems so strange, after two hundred and fifty years away from old England, is not so strange after a little thought. The line had been kept singularly pure and Pierces and Lanpheres as well as Halls, although perhaps to a lesser degree, had been bred to the same family pattern, generation after generation. So I think if you are wondering what the first Geo. Lanphere, who settled at Westerly, Rhode Island in the seventeenth century, looked like, you have only to look at the portrait of Washington Lanphere, born in New York in 1807, died in Warren County, Illinois in 1872. If you are wishing you knew what those early Pierces were like, I think you may look well at great grandmother Martha's face, whom Aunt Emmeline Stinematte greatly resembled and find more than a hint of the reckless courage that moved the three brothers, Mr. John Pierce, Capt. William Pierce, and Capt. Michael Pierce of London, England of the Old World and Sales and Scituate of the New World in their undertakings.

An immense satisfaction is evident in grandfather's face. along with a blunt philosophical strain. He had achieved what he set out to do. He wanted no "empire", no "pastures of a thousand acres", but a quiet, well-ordered domain, orchards and flocks and herds, a farm which could survive though cut off from all the rest of the world, and he wanted his children to have that same happiness, as complete as his own. For his own happiness to be completely satisfied, his children must all be where he could see them often, enjoy their company, and watch their little ones coming and growing up. That joy, too, was his. Orin and George, Oliver and Jesse, Emmeline and Sophronia and Julia all settled closely about him, and he rejoiced in the thought that in two hours time he could have them all at home again under the old roof tree. Only Clark and Sloan were left at home to be with grandmother Polly when his final summons came.

His obituary speaks of his strong family attachments, his devotion and generosity to the church and his unusual philanthropy. One quaint paragraph deserves to be recorded. Following his spiritual record is this summary - "as a citizen of the world he was equally fortunate, for he not only secured a competency of this worlds goods but what was equally desirable a host of friends. Said an acquaintance at his funeral, 'when other men came to town, the business men spoke to them if they met them, but when he came to town, the business men crossed the street in order to speak to him'." I quote again, "his funeral was attended in Columbia Hall in Young American (now Kirkwood) on February 4, 1872, by more than six hundred persons, although the day was very cold and unpleasant."

Grandmother Polly, who had had his constant companionship for more than forty years at home, at church and on their family visits, was left lonely in the big old house with just two boys to bear her company. Then Clarke married Minnie Holcombe, October 27, 1874 and Sloan married Belle Ackerman, January 13, 1875 and a rearrangement of Grandmother's life became necessary. From their mother and other brothers and sisters, Clarke bought the quarter section he always lived on and Sloan bought the old home place. Grandmother, having most of her sons and daughters down on the prairie four miles below, then built for herself, a snug little house close to the homes of Jesse and Emmeline and close, too, to Liberty Chapel of the Methodist Protestant denomination, where all her children were active in their membership. She had almost twenty years left of her life span, which she thoroughly enjoyed. She was a woman of exceptionally strong character and her sons relied to an unusual degree on her judgment, turning constantly to her for counsel. Her face in her old age is a fulfilled and happy one. She was spared the loss of any of her grown sons and daughters and was even fortunate in her final summons. She was gone without any previous illness in the twinkling of an eye with only the brief prayer upon her lips "God be merciful to me, a sinner." My first introduction to death and grief was grandmother Polly's homegoing on June 25, 1893.

CHAPTER IV

THESE LANPHERES

In the nineties, the country settled, roads passable, the pressing matters of politics, churches and schools attended to, life became a trifle easier. Occasionally there were hard times. The Spanish-American War made a little ripple, but life as a whole went along very well, and there was time to think about the past. The second generation of Warren County Lanpheres began to wonder about their paternal line. The Halls and the Pierces were accounted for, step by step, from the early seventeenth century, but "these Lanphere" - just where had they come from originally?

Certain well-defined traditions were discussed when the cousins came back for brief visits to the old home place from farther west where they kept on going. No one in my young days came from farther east than Galesburg in the next county where Judge Geo. C. had settled and brought up his family of four girls and two boys, Ione and Sabrina, Jennie and Mary, Geo. H. and Frank. These cousins always insisted that the name was French in its origin and had been LaPierre or La Pere before it was anglicized. They were also sure that the Lanpheres were French Protestant and at each telling they finished the story by saying "there is a little chapel of our family name in the Old Country."

If they had set themselves the task, they could not have invented a legend to stimulate the fancies of a romantic child more than that tale. Father was greatly interested and urged me on, so for many years I have turned this way and that in an effort to substantiate the tradition, believing that some grain of truth is at the heart of the matter, as is so invariably the case with oral tradition. Facts, may, of course, be overlaid with fancies as tales are told by succeeding generations, but there is an innate appreciation of the seriousness of tampering with the facts of human origins that makes a parent very careful in recounting family history to a child. In nine cases out of ten a little historical research proves that a tradition is substantially true.

So I discovered one day in the library of the New England Historical Genealogical Society in Boston as I turned over the pages of Guppy's Homes of Family Names in Great Britain that "Lanfear" is a name that was represented by De Lanfare in London in the reign of Edward 1 (1239-1307) among those families most ancient and of best account who had come from places in Normandy. There was no village in Normandy that did not give its name to some family in England preceded by De, Da, Des, or De la. So presumably the name may have been originally De la Pierre. Let no one be disturbed by varied spellings or pronunciations. In spite of the chameleon-like nature of our surname, all variations on this side of the Atlantic stem back to that George Lanphere who was our first representative in New England, coming from New Port to Westerly, Rhode Island and purchasing extensive holdings there in 1669.

Further reading disclosed that English authorities considered it a "peculiar" name, and found it recorded only nine times in the records of Berkshire. Of a great deal more significance is the fact that this peculiar name is found in the Domesday Book as Langfer, and again Langfere. This fact takes us back another couple of centuries to the conquest of England by the Norman Williams in 1066 and the comprehensive survey of England executed for him and recorded in those great volumes known as the Domesday Book. This survey was completed in 1086. After great political convulsion such as the Norman conquest and the wholesale confiscation of landed estates which followed as a matter of course, it was to the king's interest to make sure that the crown should suffer no loss in income. He found his Norman followers as disposed to evade their taxes as the few English who retained lands. This survey, therefore, recorded the names of the new Norman holders of lands, the assessments on which their taxes were paid and also the potential taxing value of the new kingdom. Thus we know what shire farmers held in those days under their overlord, who in his turn was directly responsible to the crown. After stating the assessment of a manor or farmhouse the record sets forth the amount of "arable land and the number of plow teams, each reckoned at eight oxen, available for working it, the river meadows, woodlands, pastures, fisheries, (being the weirs or dammed-up pools in the streams), water-mills, salt-pans if by the sea, and other subsidiary sources of revenue."

So those first Lanpheres broke the soil of England with great teams of oxen in much the same way that young Orin Lanphere and his friend plowed the Illinois prairies centuries later. It is a question whether the love of land is stronger in the heart of a Frenchman or in an Englishman. For the thrifty French, land must produce. An Englishman is content if it is fair to look upon with great trees set on gracious contours.

When next we find the name it is Welsh in spelling, being written "Llanfair." It is reasonable to surmise that some branches of the family established in Berkshire may have moved on westward toward Wales. It is also true that in 1277, Edward I stormed the hold of the rebellious Llewellyn of North Wales and during the next five years did his best to set up an English system of government in the ceded districts. It would seem possible that the record of De Lanfare's name in London chronicles during Edward's reign and its subsequent reappearance in north Wales might indicate a sovereign's disposition of his liegeman as one of the overlords of a conquered territory.

At any rate should you be vacationing in England and wish to adventure off from Bangor in north Wales in search of ancestral shrines, you will find in the Anglesey district four miles away, a little town by the name of Llanfair. The view of the Anglesey countryside and the Garnernvonshire mountains beyond is said to be magnificent. Should you wish to walk on, along the Bolyhead Road, you may continue to enjoy the fine views until you reach a certain gate from which a path leads through a fir - plantation and across a causeway to a curious little church, romantically located on an islet and known as Llandisillio Church. That I strongly suspect is is the little chapel of the Lanphere tradition.

As for the Huguenot tradition, unless some clear evidence comes to light, I fear we must abandon it. Certainly Normans coming to England with William the Conqueror carried true Catholic hearts in their bosoms. No doubt a dissenting attitude toward the Church of England developed naturally during the centuries. There can be no doubt that dissent was a strong motive in our emigrating ancestor George of Westerly. Both north and south Wales were strongholds of dissenters. The fact that George Lanphere chose to settle in colonies dominated by the Welsh Baptist, Roger Williams, indicates that he believed in tolerance for all religions as well as demanding freedom for his own form of belief. There was in him nothing of the Puritan mind to harry others into conformance with his belief. He was not before his emigration nor for some years later, formally a member of the Baptist denomination which Williams had established. How long he stayed in New Port cannot be ascertained. He bought considerable land in Westerly of John Clarke on April 18, 1669 and took the oath of allegiance to Rhode Island on March 17, 1671. Under date of March 2, 1678 we find Samuel Hubbard writing "then we went to the waterside at the mill, then Brother Hiscox baptised George Lanphere; he came out rejoicing; his wife went into the water, was fainthearted, and came back again unbaptised."

Things went well for George, he laid out a large farm and gathered his five sons and four daughters about him, and rejoiced in more than half a hundred grandchildren before his death in 1731. He was an old man in his nineties then and had been adjudged incapable of managing his own affairs. His five sons, three sons-in-law and one widowed daughter gave bond in the sum of one thousand pounds. This was almost a staggering sum in those days and indicates an estate of more than ordinary size. We do not have his will nor inventory but that of his son Shadrach who died in 1728, shows something of the comfort and prosperity this pioneer family had obtained. This inventory shows wearing apparel, riding mare, gun sword, books, a pair of silver buttons (this was a vanity forbidden by law in several of the colonies at that date), linen wheel, cordwainer's tools, two sides of sole leather, oxen, cattle and sheep in numbers, and two hundred and fifty pounds in cash. Both books and ready cash were rare then and it is interesting to note that books are mentioned as prized possessions to be carefully bequeathed in all the wills of that generation. Sometimes a considerable money value is placed upon them.

George's children were inclined to ally themselves with colonial families of note. One daughter married Eber Crandall, son of that Elder John Crandall, Baptist minister, who had come from Wales to Boston in the winter of 1634-5. He was imprisoned there for his religious beliefs and fled to Providence, Rhode Island with Roger Williams in 1637. He became the first Elder at Westerly, Rhode Island and Freeman at Newport in 1639 and may have welcomed there George Lanphere as a young neighbor from the old home across the sea.

In Newport also was John Clarke, an Englishman of fine education who also arrived in Boston in 1637 and immediately cast in his lot with Roger Williams. Clarke secured for the new colony the island Aquidnick, later named Rhode Island, and was largely instrumental in securing full provision for liberty of conscience in the new organization. From then on he spent much time traveling back and forth to England in the interests of the colony. With his descendants, the descendants of George Lanphere intermarried and to the present time there has not been lacking a Clarke Lanphere in each generation.

When I stopped for a brief two hours at the Westerly Public Library in the summer of 1935 it was with a faint hope that I might get a few clues. All my life I have been conscious that Lanphere is indeed a peculiar name. What was my surprise and my great comfort to have the librarian say, "Oh, yes; Lanphere is a well-known and honored name hereabout. Just let me hand you this and that volume full of references to them. Why don't you go to Newport where the records are even fuller, and why don't you call on this one and that one "naming several Lanpheres living in the city.

In and about Westerly, Stonington, Hopkinton, and Newport, many Lanpheres still live and have been identified with the economic and political history of that countryside for eight generations. Out in the quiet countryside is the abandoned Lanphear granite quarry, near Lanphear Hollow, and in that general direction are three little old Lanphear burying grounds. Only one grave appears in Lanphear ground No. 1. This little burying place lies about one hundred rods north of River Bend Cemetery uninclosed in a meadow. We did not have the time to investigate but we wondered of course if the first George of Westerly might have been buried there.

Lanphear ground No. 11 is west of Boon Bridge Road and about forty rods north of the residence of Thomas Salt. On the lands of Truman Lanphear is a yard inclosed with a picket fence which contains a score or more of graves. We read among the inscriptions:

Joseph Crandall, d. Feb. 6, 1837 - age 64 years, nine months.

Nancy, w. of Jos. Crandall, d. Sept. 26, 1860 - age 85 years, 10 months.

Soply A., w. of Perry Lanphear, d. Jan. 28, 1852 - age 26 years, 5 months.

Lanphear ground No. 111 is located on pasture land of the Hon. N. F. Dixon on the southwest slope of Cormorant Hill about midway between the residence of the Rev. A. B. Burdick and Lanphear Hollow and within view of Potter Hill Road. Here we read -

Capt. Clarke Lanphear, d. Feb. 11, 1865, aged 77 years, 5 months.

Wealthy, wife of Capt. Clarke Lanphear, d. Nov. 24, 1842, aged 30 years.

Keturah, wife of Capt. Clarke Lanphear, d. Sept. 1, 1856, aged 59 years.

In these brief and incomplete notations are hints of the family fortunes of those who remained in Westerly. Whaling and quarrying make up the tale. From these coasts Yankee ships set sail for the greatest deep-sea fisheries in the world. In the Lanphere annals the name of sea-captain after sea-captain appears. These men had to be daring and resourceful, accustomed as they were to risking their lives as a part of the day's work. During the Revolutionary War, whalemens turned privateers in great numbers and were a thorn in the sides of the British, so universally successful were they in their freebooting enterprise.

Until petroleum destroyed the market in Civil War days, whaling was the center of all life, business, occupations and interests of the New England shore. Whale oil was the chief means of illumination, and whalebone had a hundred and one uses in the manufactures and industries of the time. Thousands not directly connected with whaling, nevertheless made their livelihood from it. The forges worked day and night supplying blubber spades, lances, harpoons, anchors, stay-belts, chain-plates and all other ship hardware. Weavers were busy with canvas, rope makers with miles of cordage, sawmills at preparing timber for the shipbuilders, lumber men with cutting down the standing trees for masts and planing, brickyards with making bricks for the try-works erected on every whaler, and the whole countryside with planting and reaping and making cheese and butter not only to supply this great industrial population, but to provision the whalers for cruises lasting from one to three years. For all this activity, petroleum and electricity spelled the doom, and the stout, old square-rigged ships sail the waters now only in the fancy of some romancer. Quarrying, however, is still a major industry and a very fine paving stone is quarried from those same rocky hills where the Lanpheres first established themselves as quarrymen.

The first George Lanphere left five sons - Shadrack, John, Theodosius, Seth, and Richard to carry on his name. Shadrack had five sons also, Joseph, Oliver, Solomon, John and Hezekiah. The second son John was long lived and with his wife Ruth had four sons and six daughters, the sons being John, Daniel, Amos and Nathan. To the third son, Theodosius, and his wife Rachel Covey, were born eight sons and three daughters, the names of the male descendants being Theodosius, James, Joshua, Nathaniel, Samuel, Stephen, Jabez and Joseph.

In the family of George's fourth son Seth and his wife Sarah Pendleton came some tragic event, for their lives were taken simultaneously in 1725 leaving their little family to the cold charity of the community. We can only wonder why the six young ones were not gathered to the firesides of some of their many kinfolks who were more than comfortably established. The sad little record follows:

1725, Aug. 30. The following children of Seth Lanphere and wife, Sarah, were bound out, viz; Miriam, aged eleven years 10th of October last and Ann aged two years 4th of August 1723, bound to Joseph Coth (?) of Stonington, both of them to be learned to read and Miriam to have a heifer at end of service; Aaron Lanphere, bound to William Davis of Westerly, he being now sixteen years old 10th of May, last, to be learned to read and write and the trade of a cooper and to have f 10; Elizabeth Lanphere, bound to John Thompson, of Stonington, being now ten years and twenty days old, and to have two suits of clothes, a cow and a calf; Mary Lanphere, bound to Nehemiah Mason, of Stonington, she being now seven years old the 4th of October last, and to be learned to read and write, to have two suits of clothes, a cow and a calf.

1730, April 27. The Town Council further ordered Elisha Lanphere, child of Seth and Sarah, to be bound out to Samuel Hinckley of Stonington. More than three centuries later the sorrows of those little ones cry out to us, particularly the grief of Miriam, aged eleven, with two year old Ann tugging at her skirts and her heart-strings as the baby was taken away from all the familiar faces that had made up her little world hitherto.

To Richard and his wife Mary, came four daughters and only one son, Zervish. These extracts from the records are given here because of their possibly value in establishing clues, for our way for a few generations is not a clear one.

Certain members of the Lanphere clan in the third generation felt the impulse to migration just as the Pierces and the Halls were feeling it. It may help us to visualize this great migratory movement if we think of it as spreading fanwise over the country and following the river valleys, nature's highroads, into new regions. Sometimes these natural highways betrayed their unsuspecting passengers into a cul-de-sac. This was the case with the ancestors of Abraham Lincoln. In Hingham the original immigrant, Samuel Lincoln, arriving in 1637, was a neighbor of Capt. Michael Pierce. Some of the Lincolns swarmed in the second and third generations as did all the other coast families. We find the name of Lincoln in Westerly. The widow of Shadrach Lanphere married for her second husband one Samuel Lincoln. As you recall, her will showed that she, too, was a wealthy widow. The progressive migration of the Lincolns led them through the valleys of the Appalachians to Pennsylvania, thence to Virginia and Kentucky in seven generations. From there they moved into Indiana and Illinois, barely escaping the environment which has held, almost as prisoners, so many Americans of forefather blood.

A curious bit of history concerns itself with the doings of a Lanphere who had evidently followed this trail to the South. Going Lanphere is known as "a joiner and master-workman", who dwelt in the vicinity of Alexandria, Va. near which is located beautiful Mount Vernon, the much loved estate of General Washington. Going Lanphere finds first historical mention in a letter he wrote to Washington in October of 1773 from Newchurch, Virginia in which he reports his progress in remodeling Mount Vernon. For five years or more he was employed in adding the wings to either side of the original modest structure which Washington had inherited from his half-brother Lawrence. As we modern tourists of a later generation look with interest upon the elegantly proportioned banquet hall, with its exquisite triple window and beautiful fireplace, in the one wing, and the more intimate study and family room in the other wing, we can reflect with some satisfaction upon the part one of our name had in serving the one controlling life-long interest of the great general, his overmastering love for his beautiful home.

We, however, concern ourselves more closely with the Lanpheres who migrated from Rhode Island to New York. George Hall had left Providence, Rhode Island and traveled upcountry into Rensselaer County in 1775. Sylvester Pierce was living in Durham, Albany County just a little farther on when Martha was born in 1776. In the last quarter of the eighteenth century we find the Lanpheres established in Berlin, Rensselaer County. Among the landowners there are "J. Lamphier, located in the Northern part of town east of the river and also N. Lamphier in the same section." Among their neighbors are S. Green, S. Phelps, J. Nichols, and many Halls. On the later roll of 1806 appear more names of interest in our family connection; namely Briggs, Clark, Crandall, and Godfrey. Included in this list of 1806 are the names of Rowland, Elizabeth, Jonathan, Silas and Isaiah Lamphier. A branch of the Westerly, now the First Hopkinton Baptist Church of Rhode Island had been organized in 1780 at Little Hoosock, New York, and on the roll, named as among the earliest male members, appear the names of Johnathan and Amos Lamphier. This old church still exists as an organization.

From Robert's "New York and the Revolution" we find that many Lamphiers served their country in the Albany County Militia, Amos in the Fourth Regiment under Colonel Kilian Von Rensselaer, Levi in the Thirteenth, John in the levies of Weissenfels, and also of Dubois. Again John Lamphier is noted as of the Line in the First Regiment and as an "enlisted man in the Line and Levies." Joshua was in the Ninth Regiment and Francis served in the Line, both in the First and Third Regiments.

The men of the Pierce and Hall and Lanphere lines had literally jumped from the frying pan into the fire by settling in New York just before the Revolution. Some of the bloodiest and most devastating fighting of the entire war was carried on in New York. Particularly was it true of the Mohawk Valley from first to last. At the beginning of the Revolution there were twenty-five hundred Americans fit to bear arms in the Valley. By 1782 they had been reduced to less than eight hundred. So we must not omit from our story one Peter Lampfer - note the changed plumage of our name - who fought with the Tryon County farmers under General Herkimer at Oriskany which is judged to have been actually the bloodiest battle of the Revolution. Peter survived for he put in claims for damages by the enemy. We trust his claim was satisfied. Probably his home had been burned by St. Legor's scalping Indians.

Again I must repeat that all this miscellaneous information, interesting as I trust you are finding it, although not to the point, is included in the account of "These Lanpheres" in the hope that it may afford clues for further investigation. A genealogist writing in 1855 says "For the first hundred years after the settlement of New England the public registration of births, marriages and deaths was more generally made than for the last hundred years, and though many records have been destroyed by accidents, or by carelessness and negligence of custodians, yet family history can generally be more fully obtained in the earlier than in the later period. It is difficult if not impossible to compile a genealogy from the public records of the last seventy-five years, and future investigators will find this period a hiatus difficulty to get over."

There is a wicked old proverb with a double entendre which says "It is a wise child who knows its own father." In this case would it not be, indeed, a wise child among us who knew his own great-great-grandfather? Since we seem to have the rare privilege of selection we are at liberty to choose one not yet mentioned.

From the second volume of "American Ancestry" dealing with the records of Columbia County, New York, we glean the name of John Lanphere of Malden, born in 1750, died in 1792, served in the Revolutionary War. A good case can be established for John as the father of that George Lanphere who married our Great-grandmother Martha Pierce. First the name Lanphere is spelled alike in both cases, which has more than a surface significance. In the second place John was of the proper age to have been the possible father of the George Lanphere who was born in 1770. In the third place, and perhaps of the greatest significance, is the fact that John Lanphere's home in Malden lay much closer to Sylvester Pierce's home in Durham than that of any other Lanphere whose record is available. Young men did not travel far afield for their wives in those days and contiguity on the map is often a deciding factor in a genealogical conclusion.

Although we long to know much, we know very little indeed of the lives of George Lanphere and his wife Martha Pierce as they were lived in old New York state. The obituary of our grandfather Washington Lanphere, their fourth child, states that he was born in Broadalbin, Fulton County, and that his parents moved when he was an infant to Floyd, Oneida County. We gather from this brief clue that they were following the general experience of their families, in searching for arable land upon which they might establish and support a growing family. One or two legendary tales survive concerning George's disgust with the influx of Erie Canal labor gangs and the rude brutality of the Canallers. Had he been a younger man he would doubtless have moved on to a new frontier with the rest of his Yankee neighbors. He died February 4, 1834 in his sixty-fifth year.

Endless speculation over unsatisfactory records has resulted in nothing more tangible than the foregoing account. So that it is with genuine satisfaction we turn to the record from an old family Bible which settles beyond peradventure of a doubt the order in which the great-uncles and great-aunt of our present generation came into the family circle of George and Martha. Using the stream of consciousness method, which in my case merely means forcing the mind to yield up from its sub-conscious depth, bits of conversation and unrelated fragments of the past, I had laboriously pieced together the families of great-uncle Caleb and great-uncle Crin when I learned I was inadvertently attributing great-uncle Orin's second wife Harriet to great-uncle Caleb as his daughter. Pitfalls yawn before the unwary feet of every would-be family historian. We may be very grateful for the accurate information reported in that great old leather bound family Bible with its careful record in spidery writing. It is herewith appended.

The clue that enabled me to recall great-uncle Caleb's family in Whiteside County, is, I think, an interesting one. I was eleven when family councils were held as to who should represent the Warren County Lanpheres at an event of more than usual importance. Cousin Mira Fuller was about to celebrate her golden wedding anniversary, and the family were gathering from East and West, from Chicago to Nebraska. It ended with Aunt Frone (Mrs. T. J. Billings) and Aunt Mary (Mrs. J. E. Lanphere) doing the honors for the older members of our family circle. Mira had married John Fuller in Monmouth in 1846. That was four years before the birth of the twins, Father and Aunt Frone, and suggests that the relationship between the Whiteside County Lanpheres and the Warren County Lanpheres had been kept warm with true family feeling through all the intervening years.

The clue to my reconstruction of the life of great-uncle Orin is a slighter one, for he died in 1880 before I was born. In a bookcase at home were several well-worn volumes, among them Macauley's History of England. The black of the printed letters was turning brown with age. There were other books, chiefly history and theology, and they bore a very early date together with the name of Orin Lanphere written in a finely shaded hand on the yellowing flyleaves. I knew he must have been a man who read widely and thought deeply in those pioneer times. I knew, too, he was greatly loved and respected in his family circle. His sons by his first wife, Milan, Ed, Lon Will and George were the boon companions of father and his brothers in all their good times. Members of this family pushed on into the West, some of them settling in Nebraska where certain of great-uncle Caleb's sons had preceded them. There great-uncle Orin and his second wife Harriet spent their last years and had cabinet photographs made which revealed very handsome and prosperous folk. The daughters of this second marriage were Melissa Hartgrove, Alma Wood, and Ida Vreeland, all of whom were often at the old home place, as were the younger members from George C.'s family in Galesburg.

Great-aunt Polly Lanphere Barnum and her husband Ira had a family of 14 children of whom seven reached maturity, married and had families of their own. They included Martha, Paulina, Frances, Orlando, George A., Helen and Charles. The fortunes of most of these were so completely and happily a part of the development of the history of Warren County as to need no separate chronicle.

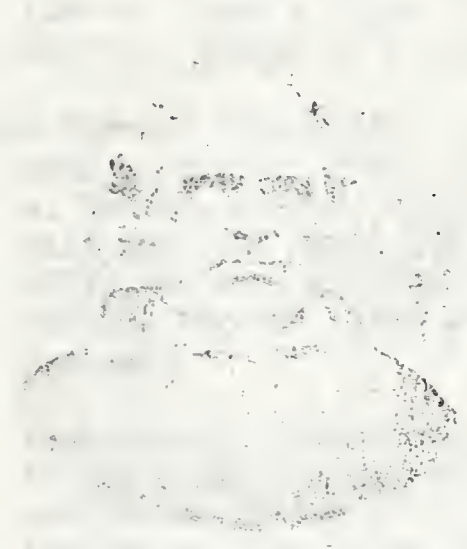

We know little enough of our great grand-father George Lanphere, although we have reason to believe his sixty-five years, covering the troublous period of the establishment of the Republic and the formation of its wider and more stable policies, were not altogether so happy and satisfying as were the years of the equal life span, granted to his son Washington. However, we do know that his life found fulfillment in the lives of these sons. Caleb and Washington, Orin and George. It still finds that same fulfillment in the lives of great-grand-children living a century later on the original acreage taken up by government grant in the second quarter of the eighteen-hundreds.

- 101 George¹ Lamphier, Lanphier, Lamphear, Lanphear, Lanphere
 Born April 8, 1770, died Feb. 4, 1834 in New York state. This book contains many family lines for someone to help identify him into one of them. On Dec. 18, 1794, he married Martha Pierce, daughter of Sylvester Pierce and Patience Wheeler. She was born Jan. 28, 1776 in Durham, N.Y. and died in Illinois July 12, 1859. Martha, at 18 had married a bridge builder named Nichols, who was killed at his trade shortly thereafter, leaving her an infant son named Jesse. Within the year she married George Lamphier (as spelled in the Pierce genealogies). She went with her son Washington and his family to Warren County Illinois in 1844.

117 Henry Capron³ (Caleb² George¹)

He was born on June 30, 1842 in Boonville, Oneida County, N.Y., shortly before his parents moved their family to Portland then to Monmouth and then to Spring Hill, Illinois. His first wife was Elvira Ophelia Marvel. They were married March 26, 1866 by the Rev. John Dodson at Portland, Illinois. Elvira was born March 26, 1845 and died York County, Nebraska, Feb. 17, 1878.

Henry served three years in the Civil War, first as a drummer boy and later in the band as a musician in Company 1, of the 112 Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Aug. 6, 1862 to July 1, 1865. At Dec. 25, 1862 he was at Camp Ella, Bishop, Ky.--in good health and weighed 167 lbs. June 3, 1863 at Camp Neare, Somerset, Ky. Nov. 7, 1863 at Lanoir, Tenn. and became a member of the Regimental Band--which was invited to Knoxville to give a concert. June 8, 1864 was in Camp Ackworth, Georgia, just before battle of Atlanta. Sept. 1864 at Decatur, Georgia. He had to leave his regiment at Columbus, Georgia in December 1864 to go to the hospital in Nashville, Tenn. He wrote to his father asking him to visit him as "he could cure him quick". Dec. 27, 1864 to March 10, 1865 in U.S. Government Hospital, Nashville, Tenn., with fever and erysipelas. He rejoined his regiment June 6, 1865 now in Chestnut Hill Hospital, Philadelphia, Pa. He was mustered out July 1, 1865. During the war he frequently sent money home to help his parents. He carried on a fairly lively correspondence with several of his girl friends, among them Alice Brooks and Nettie Cole and Elvira Marvel. In one of their January, 1865 letters the Brooks and Cole girls spoke of going to Morrison, Illinois to have their hair shingled.

The Lanphere Line

Henry carried the U.S. mail for a time following his return home from the war. He courted and married Elvira Marvel and in 1873 took their family to York County, Nebraska. He was a very successful farmer, land owner, leading citizen in his community and a County Commissioner for several years.

117 Henry, nearly three years after his first wife died, married Amanda Jane Hoddinott. They were married Dec. 15, 1881 in York County, Nebraska by Rev. H. F. Van Gordon.

Jennie, as she was most usually called, Hoddinott was born in Sandoval, Illinois, March 14, 1859. Her parents:

Buried Meridan, Louisiana) June 25, Barbara Ann Nighswander - Born Jan. 23, 1832) 1858 in

Jennie attended the University of Nebraska, but left in 1881 to enter into a contract to teach school at $28.00 a month on June 20, 1881 in a school near where Gresham was later situated in York County. Levi Fuller was a Director, James E. Murphy, Moderator, and Ernest Fuller, Treasurer of the District. She met Henry Lanphere at a 4th of July picnic dinner at the home of George Fuller. Henry courted her and they married December 15, 1881.

Jennie by her faith and courage was a firm inspiration to the children of the first family, as well as her own, continually urging them to go further in their education and to do a better job. She received much of her strength from her faith as a communicant of the Episcopal Church and imparted this to others. Many of her children are travel-

THE PIERCE LINE

The history and genealogy of the Pierce Line has been taken from many books, among them book E 69.5 by William Ensign Lincoln, and "Pierce Genealogy No. IV being the record of Captain Michael, John and Captain William Pierce" by Frederick Clifton Pierce of Rockford Illinois, published for the author by John Munsell's Sons, Albany, New York, all in the Newberry Library, Chicago, Illinois. These books apply particularly to the following record from Galfred to Ralph and from Michael to Sylvester. The sources for the information for Peter to Michael are described at that point. The present known record of the Pierce Line begins with Galfred Percy.

1 Galfred A D 972

"Brave Galfred, who to Normandy with ventious Rolla came, and from his Norman Castles won, assumed the Percy name."

The following were using the name of Peirse, as recorded in the Publication of the Harleian Society, Established MDCCCLXIX, Visitation of London Volume II, Page 149.

Heraldic Visitations, which ceased about 1686, were perambulations made by a King-at-Arms or other heradic officer with a commission under the Great Seal, to examine into pedigrees and claims to bear arms.

The Visitation in which we are interested took place in 1633-34 and 35 and was made by, S^r. Henry St. George K^t.--Richmond Herald and Deputy and Marshall to S^r. Richard St. George K^t.--Clarencieux King of Arms.

Faringdon Wth in.

The Visitation of Yorkshire that took place in 1665-66 by S^r. William Dugdale Esq. for the Suites Society Established MDCCCXXXIV as recorded in Volume XXXVI for the year MDCCCLIX, Page 325 records the same information.

Both of the above describe and picture (see adjacent page) the Peirse coat of arms for Peirse of Losenby.

Arms -- A Z a ducal coronet between three cross-crosslets fitchée O R

Crest-- a cross-crosslet fitchée O R surmounted with a mural coronet gules.

The Pierce Line

Translation:

Arms -- On a field of blue on the shield is a ducal cross ducal in gold between three cross-crosslets in gold which are pointed at the lower end.

Crest-- A cross-crosslet in gold and pointed at the lower end that is surmounted by a mural crown in red which represents masonry and a battlement.

In as much as none of us bear the surname Pierce, we have only an historic interest, but it is pleasant to know that we are descendants in a family that had a right and did have a coat of arms.

17 Peter¹⁷ Peirse - Standert Bearer to King Richard III 1483-1485 at Bosworth Field--Where he lost a leg but lived many yeres after. He founded Pearce Halle in Yorkshire.

In this newly revised, reorganized and increased in volume of information edition of the Lanphear Lamphier and Lanphere and Related Families of the 1958-1959 edition people will be able to find new pleasures in the learning about the other members of these families.

Records of the Lanphier families go back to the Middle ages when they lived to the then Province of Languedoc and Provence on either side of the Rhone River and the cities of Arles, St. Gilles, Nimes and Avignon. Dr. Charles Lanphier Patton of Springfield, Illinois wrote that while he was stationed in this area during World War I he saw the name Lanphier in many places.

Nimes, the Capital of Languedoc and St. Gilles became strongholds of the Protestant teachings of Besancon Hugue, a Geneva Switzerland Reformer. These Protestants became known as Huguenots and were severely persecuted in the 1500's and 1600's, so much so that following the great massacre of them on the Eve of St. Bartholomew Aug. 24, 1572, great numbers fled from France, the Lanphiers from Southern France, Normandy, and the Auvergne Mountain Region. Some went first to Holland, some to the Island of Jersey (where many live under the name of Lampriere), some to England, and some to Ireland. In Ireland many returned to the Roman Catholic faith and some of whom then after about a hundred and fifty years migrated to Canada, particularly Ontario Province from which several families migrated again to central and western United States.

From England came George in the early 1600's to eastern Massachusetts then to Westerly Rhode Island where he settled permanently after buying land in 1669. See pages 1 thru 13. To locate any name the following will help;

If the birth date was near or in the period	The persons number will be in the
1660-1690	200's
1680-1730	300's
1730-1770	400's
1750-1790	500's
1770-1820	600's
1820-1850	700's
1850-1890	800's

There will follow this second Preface a summary of nine other Lanphere families in America that so far I've not been able to tie into the main line of this book. There follows a list of the more common spellings of the name:

Lamphear	Lanfare
Lamphere	Lanphear
Lamphier	Lanphere
	Lanphier

By all means study the index which precedes the Preface and learn the broad list of information, and the pages on which it can be found.

Who is the father of George Lamphier, #1010 page my great grandfather, born April 8, 1770 and married Martha Pierce, Dec. 18, 1794? Could he have been the first son #520 of Isaiah number 407 page 4? Records of Isaiahs' family that people have given me list only two children, one born 1776 the other born 1778; yet Isaiah and Thankful Allen were married in 1763. What happened in those 13 years? The census of New York State for 1790 shows Isaiah and his family of 3 males over 16, 3 males under 16 and 2 females living in Albany, New York. George Lamphier #1010 page married Martha Pierce in Duram, about 20 miles from Albany in 1794. Isaiah came from a fine line of people and was well established in his own right. Martha Pierce, daughter of Sylvester Pierce came from a fine well known line of people. What could be more natural, Isaiah's children changed the spelling of their name to Lamphier.

For a third matter isn't it also very likely that Benjamin Lamphier, page directly following this preface would have been the second son #521 born 1771 and Joshua #6 page have been the fourth son #523 of Isaiah? They all came from and lived in the same regions.

To aid in locating any individual in George Lamphier's Line use the following method:

If the birth date was near or in the period	The persons number will be in the
1770's	1000's
1800-1820	2000's
1830-1850	3000's
1850-1890	4000's
1870-1900	5000's
1900-1930	6000's

George Lamphier Page 23 owned land in the town of Floyd, New York in the Oneida County Land census in 1814. James and Caroline (Pike) Martin; page 23 and 64, owned 48 acres and home near the town of Western, Oneida. County in 1814 and in April 4, 1825 they sold 52 acres of land in the town of Western Oneida Co. N. Y. Capt. Benjamin Pike with his family was the first settler in the town of Floyd in 1790 and his son Jarvis (who fought in the Revolutionary War) bought a lot in the town of Floyd in 1793 and in 1800 was elected supervisor which office he held for eleven years. In the census of 1800 of the town of Floyd, Jarvis Pike had a family of two males under 10, two who were 10 to 16, and one in the 26 to 45 years bracket, and two females who were 10 to 16, one to 26 and one 26 to 45 years. Caroline Pike, my great grandmother born in 1783 and therefor 17 years in 1800, and who married James Martin above in the same town very likely could be the daughter of Jarvis Pike who was listed in the 16 to 26 age bracket.

The following letters are used:

- m. - marriage
- d. - date of death
- ca. - circa - about

I shall appreciate help from anyone who has information that will help resolve the questions above and those raised elsewhere in this book. Again, I must repeat, I take no responsibility for the accuracy of the information in this book, I have only reported all this information as recorded, although I have faith that the sources were the most reliable possible.

THE LANPHERE LINE

3170 Lanphere, Henry, Capron, nearly three years after his first wife died, married Amanda Jane Hoddinott. See page 70 #631. They were married Dec. 15, 1881, York Co., Nebraska by Rev. H. T. Van Gordon.

Jennie, (as she was most usually called) Hoddinott was born in Sandoval, Illinois, March 14, 1859. Her parents: Thomas H. Hoddinott - b. Sussex, England, buried Meridan, Mississippi and Barbara Ann Nighswander - Born Jan. 23, 1832 in Licking County, Ohio, d. 1904 in Lincoln, Nebraska. They were married June 25, 1858 in Carlyle, Illinois.

Barbara Ann's parents were: Jessie Nighswander - Born near Natual Bridge, Rockbridge Co., Virginia) and Elizabeth Rocky - Born in Maryland. They were married at Lithamplus, Fairfield Co., Ohio.

Jennie attended the University of Nebraska, but left in 1881 to enter into a contract to teach school at $28.00 a month on June 20, 1881 in a school near where Gresham was later situated in York County. Levi Fuller was a Director, James E. Murphy, Moderator, and Ernest Fuller, Treasurer of the District. She met Henry Lanphere at a 4th of July picnic dinner at the home of George Fuller. Henry courted her and they married December 15, 1881.

Jennie by her faith and courage was a firm inspiration to the children of the first family, as well as her own, continually urging them to go further in their education and to do a better job. She received much of her strength from her faith as a communicant of the Episcopal Church and imparted this to others. Many of her children are traveling the same religious life.

Henry died Nov. 6, 1916 at Gresham, Nebraska and is buried there. Jennie died in Los Angeles, California July 5, 1948 and is buried in Gresham, Nebraska.

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a study of the properties of the function $f(x)$ defined by the equation $f(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x}$. It is shown that $f(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$.

2. In the second part of the paper, we consider the function $F(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log n$. It is shown that $F(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $-\frac{1}{2}$.

3. In the third part of the paper, we consider the function $G(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^2 n$. It is shown that $G(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $\frac{1}{6}$.

4. In the fourth part of the paper, we consider the function $H(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^3 n$. It is shown that $H(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $-\frac{1}{12}$.

5. In the fifth part of the paper, we consider the function $I(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^4 n$. It is shown that $I(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $\frac{1}{24}$.

6. In the sixth part of the paper, we consider the function $J(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^5 n$. It is shown that $J(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $-\frac{1}{48}$.

7. In the seventh part of the paper, we consider the function $K(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^6 n$. It is shown that $K(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $\frac{1}{96}$.

8. In the eighth part of the paper, we consider the function $L(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^7 n$. It is shown that $L(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $-\frac{1}{192}$.

9. In the ninth part of the paper, we consider the function $M(x) = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} \frac{1}{n^x} \log^8 n$. It is shown that $M(x)$ is a continuous function of x for $x > 1$ and that it has a simple pole at $x = 1$ with residue $\frac{1}{384}$.

1. The first of the two main theorems of this paper is a generalization of the theorem of L. J. Mordell (1922) on the rational points on curves of genus $g > 1$. It states that if C is a curve of genus $g > 1$ defined over a number field K , then the set of rational points on C is finite.

2. The second main theorem is a generalization of the theorem of G. Faltings (1983) on the rational points on curves of genus $g > 1$. It states that if C is a curve of genus $g > 1$ defined over a number field K , then the set of rational points on C is finite.

3. The third main theorem is a generalization of the theorem of J. H. Poincaré (1901) on the rational points on curves of genus $g > 1$. It states that if C is a curve of genus $g > 1$ defined over a number field K , then the set of rational points on C is finite.

4. The fourth main theorem is a generalization of the theorem of A. Weil (1948) on the rational points on curves of genus $g > 1$. It states that if C is a curve of genus $g > 1$ defined over a number field K , then the set of rational points on C is finite.

5. The fifth main theorem is a generalization of the theorem of P. Deligne (1974) on the rational points on curves of genus $g > 1$. It states that if C is a curve of genus $g > 1$ defined over a number field K , then the set of rational points on C is finite.

THE PIERCE LINE

The history and genealogy of the Pierce Line has been taken from many books, among them book E 69.5 by William Ensign Lincoln, and "Pierce Genealogy No. IV being the record of Captain Michael, John and Captain William Pierce" by Frederick Clifton Pierce of Rockford Illinois, published for the author by John Munsell's Sons, Albany, New York, all in the Newberry Library, Chicago, Illinois. These books apply particularly to the following record from Galfred to Ralph and from Michael to Sylvester. The sources for the information for Peter to Michael are described at that point. The present known record of the Pierce Line begins with Galfred Percy.

Arms -- On a field of blue on the shield is a ducal coronet cross ducal in gold between three cross-crosslets in gold which are pointed at the lower end.

Crest-- A cross-crosslet in gold and pointed at the lower end that is surmounted by a mural crown in red which represents masonry and a battlement.

In as much as none of us bear the surname Pierce, we have only an historic interest, but it is pleasant to know that we are descendants in a family that had a right and did have a coat of arms.

This is a very old family of the region of Signau of the Niederstocken, Hofen, Lietzelfkirk, Canton Berne, Switzerland. Neuenschwand is a Swiss name for a newly cleared tract of land. It originated about a thousand years ago among the German speaking Swiss in the region ten to twenty miles east and southeast of Bern in the Emmenthal, the Valley of the Emme River, near Eggivil Traub, Langnau, Signau and Thurn.

The family name derived from the name given to this region. As the families migrated through Germany or France to the American colonies and then spread throughout the United States the name became spelled in many ways, mostly resulting from poor hand writing or attempts to spell it as it was heard pronounced. Some of the most frequent spellings are:

Nighswander	Nisoanger	Nyswaner
Neyswander	Niswanger	Nicewanger
Neiswander	Niswanter	Knighswander

At one time Abraham, one of the brothers of Isaac Neuenschwandger had a chest of family records going back prior to the 1200's, but it was lost sometime during the move to America. The largest castle of the family was built in 1357 on the Neuenschwand.

During the 15 and 16 and 1700's Switzerland was beset by religious wars in which great hatred arose between the established churches, the followers of Hugue (later the Huguenots), the German Lutherans, the Swiss Reformed churches and the Roman Catholics. It became th thing for the younger members of the prominent families of those times to strike out for themselves and the religious freedom in America made it the place to go. Many families had already moved out of Switzerland into Southwest Germany, Alsace Lorraine, and even into France. Early German missionaries had found undisturbed religious freedom in Pennsylvania, western Maryland and Virginia. They could have their own hymn books and Bibles in this new land.

In 1671 there was an exodus of Mennonites to Germany and to the American Colonies. This religious sect was named after Menno Simon, and among other things there was opposition to taking oaths, infant baptism (from which came the name annabaptists) and military service, and, the rules for plain dress and living wer adopted. That part of the Reformation that led to the Mennonite movement began in Switzerland in 1525. Menno Simon, a Roman Catholic priest, joined the group in 1636.

As these families dispersed over the American Colonies and later the States many of them gave up the rigid rules of the Mennomites and took on the social life, education, and joined the churches of the areas in which they lived. This was particularly true of the Neunschwandger families. As a matter of fact there are eight members of the these families who served or fought in the Revolutionary War and the Indian Wars of that era, as well as a larger number fought in the American Civil War. And of equal importance a large portion of the members of these families have served as school teachers and educators of prominence, in America as well as in Europe. Several decades ago there were more teachers in Darke County, Ohio of the Nighswanger (or other spellings) than all of the teachers of other names put together. And, of course, there have been ministers of the Gospel

It should be noted that while in Europe the Amish became an offshoot of this sect, taking that name for the founder, Jacob Ammon. The Amish separated from the Mennonites because they were firm in holding fast to the church rules of plain dress and living habits - and most still do.

Nearly all of these families came into America through the port of Philadelphia and settled first in eastern Pennsylvania (Lancaster was one center). The language of this region called Pennsylvania Dutch was actually an outgrowth of the Palatinate in Germany because most of the settlers had come from there.

The Neuenschwandgers did not stay in the Lancaster area but a few months, but moved into the Shenandoah Valley and surrounding areas in Virginia where they lived for perhaps two generation, then most of them moved to Ohio where now rich lands were opening up for settlers.

In 1690 a Wolfgang Von Neuenschwanger is of record living in southeast Germany. In the patrimonial system the eldest male inherited the titles and most of the properities, accordingly many of the younger males left to seek their fortune elsewhere. Isaac (Ysack) Neyswander (Neuenschwanger, born about 1730) was one such, as he was in a "party of 25" Swisssers from Zweybrech arrived on the ship "Phoenix" on Oct. 1, 1754 from Rottrodam," original". Lists of the Arrivals in the Port of Philadelphia of German Pioneers", Pennsylvania German Society, Norristom, Pa., Volumes, I, II, III. Volume II shows photographs of the original signatures on oaths of Fidelity and Abjuration to the Kings of England and the Colonies, George II or James as the case might be, and since they had been so long on their journey many had lost their papers for passage. For these voyages across the Atlantic to America they usually left their homes in May, had to go through many customs in Holland, were laid up in some ports for several weeks at a time, the ships usually stopped at Cowes, England on the way, and so the trips were exceedingly long, difficult and tiresome. Many used up all their money buying food along the way.

The foregoing is also reported in the "Lists of Swiss Emigrants in the 18th Century to the American Colonies", Volume II, Faust and Brumbaugh, published by the "Natiaonl Geneological Society", Washington, D. C. 1925.

Isaac was in the party that had paid up all their taxes to the administrator of the Landvogter before leaving Ergnee. These people were skillful, industrious, prosperous and temperate. There follows a list of the principal arrivals:

- Neuswanger, Jacob with sons Christian and Jacob arrived at Lancaster, Pa., 1711.
- Nighswander, Christian (Xtian) on the ship "Mortonhouse" arrived in Phila., Pa., Aug. 13, 1728.
- Nighswander, Ulrich, arrived on the "Frances and Elizabeth", Sept. 21, 1742.
- Nighswander, Samuel, arrived on the "Crown" Aug. 30, 1749.
- Neuenschwandger, Isaac (Ysack) arrived on the "phoenix", Oct. 1, 1754.

Armory, or coats of arms, were badges of distinction, were awarded for personal merit and could be obtained or received by the humblest as well as those in high estate. Today they are testimonials and warrants of bravery, heroism, and meritorious deeds of our ancestors. While the use of such badges have been traced back to Jewish tribes, Greece and Rome, in modern times they, as in the time of the crusades, were worn on the shield or armor, the crest was usually placed on a wreath on tope of the shield.

Reistaps "Armorial General", U. S. Library of Congress, in Schwertzer (Swiss) Berne, describes the coat of arms of the Neuenschwandger family as follows:

"De Sin a un Sygne a'arg, Nagent sur un fasce ondre d'azur en p el aco en chef De deaux Croisettes d' or crest, un cygne demenere d' arce".

Freely translated, this is a shield, background deep green with a silver swan afloat on blue waters, with a golden cross in each upper corner, surmounted by an open helmet on a wreath on which is a crest, a cygnet in flight.

This is pictured in J-B Reistaps "General Armorial Illustrated" by Victor and Henri Rolland, Vol. 4 Sanvergarde Historiquial, 142 Rue de Cre'que, 142 Lyon, France.

1. The purpose of this document is to provide a detailed description of the system architecture and its components. The system is designed to handle large volumes of data and provide real-time processing capabilities. The architecture is based on a modular design, allowing for scalability and flexibility in the future.

2. The system consists of several key components, including a data ingestion layer, a processing layer, and a storage layer. The data ingestion layer is responsible for receiving data from various sources and normalizing it into a common format. The processing layer performs complex calculations and data transformations. The storage layer is used to store the processed data and provide a query interface for the users.

3. The system is designed to be highly available and fault-tolerant. It uses a distributed architecture with multiple redundant components to ensure that the system can continue to operate in the event of a hardware failure. The system also includes a monitoring and alerting mechanism to detect and respond to any issues that may arise.

4. The system is designed to be secure and compliant with industry standards. It includes a robust authentication and authorization mechanism to ensure that only authorized users can access the system. The system also implements data encryption and other security measures to protect the data from unauthorized access.

5. The system is designed to be easy to use and maintain. It includes a user-friendly interface and comprehensive documentation to help users get the most out of the system. The system also includes a self-healing mechanism to automatically detect and resolve common issues, reducing the need for manual intervention.

America to a degree that between 1730 and 1770 a half million of these people came from Ulster to the American colonies. It is estimated that by 1770 one third of the population of Pennsylvania was Scotch-Irish. While many went also to New England, Maryland and Virginia particularly in its western and northern part a large number settled in North Carolina. James Downing came to Northern Virginia in this movement. At the same time large numbers of Swiss and Germans looking for religious freedom were immigrating into Pennsylvania, but due to the incoming large numbers of people such as the Scotch-Irish, above, who had firm ideas on religion, all these peoples moved every few years on into the Shenandoah Valley, then into Tennessee, Ohio and on westward. He moved to cities with colleges to educate his children.
